The lower Court held that the right to sue did not accrue until the property had been demanded and refused; that the plaint contained no allegation of such demand and refusal; that the plaint could not be amended by the insertion of such an allegation after answer filed; and that therefore the suit could not be maintained. Held, reversing the decree, that even if the present case were one in which the provision as to demand could have any application at all, still the suit ought not to have been dismissed on that technical ground, when the defendant by his answer traversed the whole of the allegations in the plaint and pleaded the statute of limitation. *MANIKYA ROW LAKSHMAYAH v. 41. ——— Suit to set aside sale for arrears of revenue and for possession—Purchase by fraud—Forfeiture of tenancy—Trustee of owner in equity. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land, and prayed to set aside the sale of it by the revenue authorities for arrears of assessment due on the land. He alleged that he had let the land to the defendant, on condition of the latter paying the Government assessment and certain rent in cash and kind to the plaintiff; that the defendant, having intentionally made a default in payment of the assessment, fraudulently caused the land to be sold by the revenue authorities and purchased it himself. The defendant traversed the plaintiff's allegations, and stated that he was in possession of the land as purchaser at the revenue sale. The Subordinate Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that he failed to prove either the defendant's liability to pay the assessment, or any fraud on his part with respect to the sale of the land, and that the sale could not be set aside. His decree was affirmed on appeal by the Assistant Judge on the sole ground that the sale could not be set aside. He did not go into the merits of the case. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, that the plaint ought not to have contained any prayer for setting aside the sale, but that as it contained a prayer for possession, it might be read as praying (or at least that the plaintiff might have been permitted to amend it so that it might simply pray) that the defendant should, under the circumstances alleged by the plaintiff, be declared a trustee of the land for the plaintiff. Held, also, that, if the plaintiff's allegations were true, the plaintiff would be entitled to such a declaration, and the defendant would be discharged of his sub-tenancy in consequence of his conduct which worked a forfeiture of any right to be continued as tenant. *BALKRISHNA VASUDEV v. 43. ——— Suit for possession of share of joint Hindu family before partition—Suit for partition. A, one of three members of an undivided Hindu family, mortgaged his share in the immoveable family property to B. The mortgage recited that the money was raised in order to enable A to sue his co-parceners for partition of the family property and possession of his share therein. A subsequently did bring a suit with that object against his co-parceners, but allowed it to be dismissed against him for default. B now brought a suit against A and his co-parceners for possession of A's share in such family property. Held, that B's suit, being a suit for possession, was wrongly framed and was not maintainable, there never having been any partition of the joint family property. Leave, however, was given to B, on certain terms, to amend his plaint, so as to make his suit a suit for partition. KRISHNAJI LAKSHMAN RAJVADE v. SITARAM MURARRAV JAKHI . . . I. L. R. 5 Bom. 498 cannot be allowed to amend his plaint by abandoning his own story and adopting that of the defendant, and asking relief on that footing : for the question, whether on that footing the plaintiff is entitled to relief, is one to which the defendant's attention has not been called and which he has had no opportunity of answering. In a suit to recover a specified sum for the hire of cargo boats and not asking for any other relief, the defendant alleged and proved that he was merely the agent of the plaintiff to find hirers for the boats, and that he was not liable for the hire of the boats. Held, that, although prima facie a principal is entitled to an account and discovery from his agent, the plaintiff could not obtain such relief in the suit as framed, and that he could not, after coming to a hearing, be allowed to amend his plaint by inserting an alternative prayer for relief, upon the footing of the case set up by the defendant. *SHIBKRISTO SIRCAR v. In a suit brought in a District Munsif's Court to declare certain land liable to be sold in execution of a decree for more than R2,500, the defendants pleaded that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Munsif allowed the plaintiff to amend the plaint by stating that he abandoned his claim to execute the decree against the land for more than R2,500. On appeal, the District Judge held that the plaint could not be amended after the first hearing. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that the claim was not one which could be amended, so as to bring the suit within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif. *ANNAJI v. fraud, and the plaint contains general allegations but no specific instances of the alleged fraud, it ought to be immediately, on presentation, rejected or returned for amendment, as it does not disclose a cause of action. The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud. Held, that the amendment could not then be allowed and the suit must fail. KRISHNAJI V. 51. ——— Suit by Bank for money against executrix—Civil Procedure Code, s. 53—Order returning plaint for amendment—Form of suit. A suit was brought by the manager of the M Bank against the executrix of B to recover a sum of money as due upon a bond executed by B in favour of the Bank. The plaint described the defendant as "Mrs. Sarah G. Barlow, of Mussoorie," and stated that she was executrix of the deceased B. It began thus: "George Henry Webb, Manager of the abovenamed plaintiff's business, states as follows," and proceeded to state that the deceased was, at the time of his death, "indebted to the plaintiff," and to set forth the cause of action in detail. It was signed and verified thus: "For the B Bank, Limited, G. H. Webb, Manager." The Court of first instance returned the plaint for amendment under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the suit should not have been brought in the form in which it was brought, but in the form referred to in s. 213 and No. 105 of Sch. IV of the Code. Held, with reference to this ground, that the plaintiff was at liberty to bring a suit for money against any person administering to or representing the estate; and if such suit should be found with reference to the facts in evidence not maintainable, it should be dismissed; but there was no authority for returning a plaint for amendment, when it was found that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was brought, in order to amend it so as to convert the suit into one of a different character. MUSSOORIE BANK V. under s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and their names struck off the record. A proved no special damage. Held, (i) that the fact that the other raiyats of the village had similar rights did not make A's right a public right in the sense that no action could be brought upon it unless special damage was proved; (ii) that the right claimed vested in A severally as well as jointly with the other raiyats and the amendment of the plaint was not contrary to the provisions of s. 31 or 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure. VENKATACHALA V. 54. ——— Joint family—Mortgage by a father—Decree against father on mortgage giving possession with interest and costs—Son's liability to satisfy the decree as to interest and costs. The plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. At the hearing of the appeal to the High Court it was alleged that the plaintiffs had separated from their father before the mortgage decree was passed against him, and an application was made on their behalf that the plaint in this case should be amended by inserting an allegation to that effect. Held, that the amendment could not be allowed. Such an amendment would entirely alter the points of contention between the parties. In suing in the form adopted by the plaintiffs they doubtless intended to take the chance of getting a greater advantage than they would have obtained if they had sued merely as separated sons. They sought to liberate the property altogether from liability on the ground that the debt was immoral and that the estate could not therefore be bound by the decree at all. A suit was brought for rent of a hat on the basis of a verbal settlement for three years at an annual jama of R370. The defendants denied the settlement. The first Court found for the plaintiff; but on appeal, an objection having been raised by the defendants that the verbal lease was illegal under the Transfer of Property Act, the suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs contended on appeal that the suit should not have been dismissed, but that they were entitled to a decree for use and occupation. Held, that a decree for use and occupation of the land by the defendants could not be granted in this case, as that would amount to an amendment raising issues of an entirely different character from those on which the trial was held in the Courts below as a suit for rent, and necessitating a trial upon fresh evidence. One of the two plaintiffs was the widow of a co-sharer in the village, who, at the time of his death, was a member of a joint Hindu family, and it was held she could not claim pre-emption. Held, with reference to the manner in which the plaint was framed, that the other plaintiff could not claim pre-emption entirely on his own account without amending the plaint, but that it was too late for him to take such a course. Damodar Das v. 61. ————— Joinder of causes of action—Same parties suing in different capacities—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 26 and 31. By the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the New Dhurumsey Poonjabhoy Spinning and Weaving Company, the plaintiffs' firm of M F & Co. were appointed agents of the company for twenty-five years, and it was provided that they should have the general control and management of the company. Cl. 98 of the articles provided that the said firm, as such agents, should have full power and authority (inter alia) to appoint and employ, in or for the purposes of the transaction and management of the affairs and business of the company such solicitors as they should think proper. An agreement, dated 26th August 1874, was also entered into between the company and the partners in the firm of M F & Co., their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the time being constituting the partnership firm of M F & Co., whereby it was agreed that the said firm should be agents to the company for twenty-five years to buy and sell, etc., and particularly to exercise all the powers contained in cl. 98 of the Articles of Association. Messrs. C & B were duly appointed solicitors to the company, and acted as such for a considerable time. M, one of the members of the said firm of M F & Co., died in the middle of March 1876. The plaintiffs complained that G, one of the shareholders in the company, became desirous of ousting the plaintiffs from the position of agents of the company, and of becoming the managing director of the company; that in July 1881 he procured his own election and that of certain nominees of his as directors of the company, and on the 8th August 1881 procured the passing of a resolution at a Board meeting to the effect that as Messrs. C & B, the company's solicitors, were also the solicitors of the agents, it was desirable for the interests of the company, that a change should be made and that Messrs. H C & L be appointed solicitors of the company. The plaintiffs alleged that the only object of passing the said resolution was to facilitate the design of G, of ousting the plaintiffs from their agency, and getting the management of the company for himself; that Messrs. H C & L had been for a long time the solicitors of G, and had been advising him in his designs upon the company and upon the plaintiffs, and they contended that the resolution was a breach of the contract between the company and the plaintiffs and a violation of the Articles of Association of the company. The plaintiffs sued G and two other directors of the company and the company itself, and prayed for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from committing any breach of the agreement of 26th August 1874 and in particular from carrying into effect the resolution appointing Messrs. H C & L as solicitors for the company, and to restrain them from doing anything inconsistent with the Memorandum and Articles of Association. The defendants contended that the contract of the 26th August 1874 had been determined by the death of M, and that the powers conferred on the agents by cl. 98 of the Articles were, subject to the general powers of management, vested in the directors by the Articles, and that the case was not one in which an injunction could be granted. Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs sought to obtain the injunction on the ground that the resolution of the 8th August 1881 appointing Messrs. H C & L solicitors of the company was contrary to the Memorandum of Association, and therefore ultra vires; and, in order that this point might be pressed against the defendants, it was proposed that the plaintiff should be amended by alleging a cause of action in two of the plaintiffs as shareholders as well as a cause of action in all the plaintiffs as parties contracting with the company. Held, that under the provisions of ss. 26 and 31 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) the amendment could not be allowed. The plaintiffs, as shareholders and contractors, had not the same cause of action, by which words were meant not only the act complained of, but also the right violated by that act. The rights of the plaintiffs as contractors, alleged to be violated by the resolution, were rights given to them by their agreement but the rights of the plaintiffs as shareholders were rights secured to them by the Articles of Association. *NUSSERWANJI v. 71. On the 11th August 1879 the defendant, as a Magistrate in charge of a talukh, made an order under ss. 523 and 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872) directing the plaintiff to remove a certain "ota" on the ground that it had been built upon a public thoroughfare. The plaintiff thereupon sued the Magistrate for a declaration that the "ota" and site belonged to him, and prayed for a reversal of the Magistrate's order. The Assistant Judge who tried the suit dismissed it, holding that it did not lie against the defendant. On appeal, the High Court, following the decision in Nilkantthapa Malkapa v. Magistrate of Sholapur, I. L. R. 6 Bom. 670, reversed the decree of the Assistant Judge, and remanded the case, in order that the plaintiff might amend his suit by striking out the name of the first class Magistrate as defendant, and substituting in that capacity the Secretary of State for India in Council, and directing the lower Court to determine the suit upon its merits after the above amendment

The persons whose names were entered on the record as defendants were, in fact, dead when the suit was instituted. The suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs appealed and sought leave to amend the plaint by substituting for the names of the dead men those of their legal representatives, as against whom the suit would then have been barred by limitation. Held, that the amendment should not be allowed. MALLIKARJUNA v. 74. ———— Substitution of parties as defendants. In an application to amend a plaint by substitution of the name of a firm for the Official Assignee as defendants, it was shown that the firm had been adjudicated insolvents, and one of them had obtained his permanent discharge; that the cause of action arose prior to the insolvency; and that no written statements had been filed. The application was granted, the costs to be paid by the plaintiff. DELHI AND LONDON BANK v. MILLER.

75. ———— Amendment by striking out name of defendant—Suit for damages for wrongful acts of Government servant—Distinct averments against each party. The plaintiff had purchased at a Government auction a license to vend spirituous liquors, paid the first instalment of the purchase-money, and demanded a license, but did not receive it until six days later. Meantime he opened a shop and sold "tari" for three days, when the sale was stopped by the Extra Assistant Commissioner, notwithstanding the plaintiff represented that he was a license-holder. The present suit was brought against the Government represented by the Deputy Commissioner for damages on account of wrongful acts of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, who was made second defendant. The Judge, holding that where a servant does a wrongful act maliciously he is personally liable and the master is free, left it to the plaintiff to say against whom he would proceed. The plaintiff elected to proceed against Government and obtained a decree for a part of his claim. In the lower Appellate Court the Judges were divided in opinion, the Recorder holding that the first Court was justified in allowing the plaintiff to abandon his suit against the second defendant, to whom malice had been imputed, and that the suit was still maintainable against the Government; and the Judicial Commissioner, considering it irregular to allow this action, inasmuch as the claims for damages on account of the illegal and malicious acts of the second defendant and for damages for non-issue of license by the first defendant were inconsistent with each other. Held, by the High Court, that the view of the Recorder was correct. Nevertheless, the plaintiff ought not to have been put to the option of abandoning his suit against one or other defendant, but the suit should have been tried out. Held, also, that the allegations against the two defendants were distinct, but not inconsistent, and that the Judicial Commissioner had taken too strict a view of the plaint. VYTHEELINGUM v. 76. ———— Suit brought under wrong Act—Suit erroneously brought under Rent Act. Where a suit had been erroneously brought under Bengal Act VIII of 1859, s. 30, and the plaintiff applied to have it amended in that respect, whereupon the Munsif dismissed the suit, the case was returned by the High Court with directions to allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint on payment of the costs. In the matter of the petition of GOBIND CHUNDER GHOSE. GOBIND CHUNDER GHOSE v. 77. ———— Relinquishment of claim for sale—Civil Procedure Code, s. 53—Suit on a mortgage for sale or "any other relief to which the plaintiff might be entitled"—Subsequent prayer for money decree, relinquishing claim for sale. The plaintiff, a mortgagee, came into Court asking for a decree for a sale on his mortgage, or "any other relief to which the plaintiff might be entitled." The mortgage sued upon contained the usual covenant for payment, in addition to the further covenant that in default of payment proceedings might be taken against the mortgaged property. Held, that there was nothing to prevent such plaintiff in the course of the suit relinquishing his claim for sale of the mortgaged property, and asking merely for a simple money decree. Such an amendment of the pleadings did not amount to a conversion of the suit into a suit of another and inconsistent character. SUKHDEO PRASAD v. LACHMAN SINGH (1902) I. L. R. 24 All. 456

under the agreement of the 25th October, 1895, whereas it should have been the agreement of the 26th August 1895; and the Court, acting on this representation, made the order, which applied to the alleged agreement of the 26th October, 1895. On application to amend the order and the plaint, or in the alternative to read the existing order as if it were in reality applicable to the right agreement:—Held, that no order for amending the plaint or the order could be made; the amendment of the order would operate only as a new order, taking effect from the date on which it is made, and could not therefore operate as the basis or authority for the present suit. The plaintiff's authority to maintain this suit depends solely upon the order appointing him Receiver: if it has been made under any mistake, it cannot by any course of construction be regarded as applying to any thing other than the subject-matter specified by the order itself, the intention of the parties being immaterial. Way v. Hearn, 13 C. B. (N. S.) 292, 304, distinguished. In order to satisfy the requirements of s. 19 of the Limitation Act, though a promise to pay need not be made out, it is necessary when the right claimed is a debt that an unequivocal and unqualified admission of the debt or a part of it, or of the subsisting relationship of debtor and creditor, should be established. There is a distinction in this respect between the law of limitation applicable in England and that in force in this country. Fink v. Buldeo Dass, 1 L. R. 26 Calc. 715, distinguished. *Venkata v. The plaint stated the profits of the property to be RS-4-0, and should therefore have borne Court-fee stamps to the amount of the proper Court-fee on R123-12-0; but the valuation given in the plaint was only R108-12-0 and the plaint was stamped accordingly. The plaint was reported by the officer of the Court to be properly stamped on the valuation; but, when the case came on for hearing, the defendant objected that the relief had been undervalued. On this objection the Court found that RS-4-0 was the correct amount of profits, disallowing the plaintiff's application to be allowed to reduce the amount of profits stated in the plaint to R6-14-10, and rejected the plaint under s. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, that this was not a case falling within s. 28 of the Court-fees Act, 1870; but one to which s. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure applied. The Court had no power to extend the time for making up the deficiency in the Court-fee beyond the expiry of the prescribed period of limitation, and the plaint was rightly rejected. *MUHAMMAD AHMAD v. The defendant objected that the suit was barred under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). After the settlement of the issues in the case, the plaintiffs applied for leave to amend the plaint by adding thereto a prayer for injunction by way of consequential relief. The lower Court refused to grant the prayer. Held, that the lower Court should have exercised its discretion in plaintiff's favour, although the prayer for amendment was made very late, as it was a mere matter of form which could not affect the merits of the claim or transform the nature of the suit. *KALABHAI v. The Judge amended the plaint by striking out the portion "regarding the reliefs other than the relief for damages," and then holding that the claim for damages would lie only in the Small Cause Court, returned the plaint for presentation in that Court. Held. that the Subordinate Judge was not justified in returning the plaint at that stage of the proceedings. 14. ———— Suit or appeal filed in a wrong Court—Return of plaint or memorandum of appeal for presentation in proper Court—Practice of the High Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 373—Cancellation of court-fee stamps. The Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) does not allow of a plaint or memorandum of appeal being returned to the plaintiff, or appellant, after a case has been heard on its merits, and just as the plaintiff or appellant discover that the Court is about to pronounce an adverse decision. There is no provision in the Court for the return of a plaint to a plaintiff after it has been admitted, and the court-fee stamps thereon cancelled. Even if the Code allowed the High Court to return a plaint after the court-fee stamps have been cancelled, the plaint could not be again legally presented in any Court without new stamps being affixed to it. The second defendant only appeared, and objected to the jurisdiction of the Court; but his objection was overruled, and a decree was made against all three defendants. Where a suit for the determination of an interest in immoveable property was filed in a Court within the jurisdiction of which the property was not situate and was held not to lie in that Court as all the defendants did not reside within the jurisdiction of that Court even though the relief sought could have been obtained through their personal obedience:—Held, that in such a case the Judge ought not to dismiss the suit, but return the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court under s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code. *ISAK v. 3. ———— Ground for rejection—Undervaluation of suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 31. In a suit in a Munsif's Court it was found after issues had been fixed and some evidence recorded, that the claim had been undervalued, and that the proper valuation would carry it beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif. The plaint was accordingly returned, and additional stamps having been filed, the case was tried by the Principal Sudder Ameen. The Judge on appeal held that the plaint had been illegally returned by the Munsif, and that the act of the Principal Sudder Ameen in proceeding to try the case was illegal. He accordingly dismissed the suit. Held, that the Munsif was right under s. 31, Act VIII of 1859, in not dismissing the suit, but rejecting the plaint; and that, when the same plaint was filed with the proper amount of stamp duty in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen, that Court had jurisdiction to try the case. RAM GUTTY v. 5. ———— Undervaluation of suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 31. Where the lower Court rejected a plaint on the ground of an improper joinder of causes of action, and also that the suit was not sufficiently valued, and the High Court was of opinion that there had been no improper joinder of causes of action, the order of the lower Court was reversed, and the Civil Judge directed to deal with the case in accordance with s. 31, Act VIII of 1859. KRISTNA AYYANGAR v. imately valued their claim at R16-15-0. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the claim was for recovery of money, and should have been valued at R1,000. He therefore called on the plaintiffs to make up the stamp to that required on this valuation; and the plaintiffs refusing, he dismissed their suit under s. 54 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held, that in any case the Subordinate Judge was wrong. If the suit was really one for an account, the plaintiffs were entitled to value the relief they sought approximately, as they had done; if it were not one for an account, but for recovery of money, still the Subordinate Judge had no power himself to value the relief sought, but should have called on the defendant to value the relief he sought, and then if he had thought such relief was undervalued, he could have applied s. 54 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and rejected the suit. BALVANTRAO v. BHIMASHANKAR . . . I. L. R. 13 Bom. 517

7. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 32—Ground for rejecting plaint. A plaint will not be rejected, under s. 32 of Act VIII of 1859, if the subject-matter alleged raises a fair question of claim or right for trial and determination between the parties. The mere unlikelihood of the plaintiff's success is not enough to justify the rejection of his plaint. LAKSHMI AMMAL v. TIKARAM TOVAJI . . . 1 Mad. 240

8. ———— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 39—Document sued on not produced with plaint. Held, that the Court to which a plaint is presented has no authority to reject it, merely because the document upon which the plaintiff sues is not produced with the plaint, as directed s. by 39 of Act VIII of 1859, and that the High Court has power to set aside an order of rejection, as well as the decision of the District Court confirming it on appeal, and to direct that the plaint be received. Ex parte RAYCHAND AMICHAND. . . 2 Bom. 391 : 2nd Ed. 369

9. ———— Reference to document not in plaint—Claim for damages for malicious prosecution. A Judge, in considering under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, whether he should admit or reject a plaint, is wrong in referring to documents and facts not stated in, or annexed to, the plaint, nor ascertained by him by interrogation of the plaintiff, although such documents and facts may have been on record in other proceedings in the Judge's Court. In a plaint claiming damage for an unsuccessful criminal prosecution of the plaintiff by the first defendant, and sanctioned by the second defendant as a Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff (though stating in the plaint that the second defendant "maliciously and without authority" sanctioned the prosecution, and that the Magistrate before whom it was brought held that there was no cause whatever for the charge) did not allege in the plaint that the first defendant prosecuted him (plaintiff) maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause, or that the prosecution was sanctioned by the second defendant without reasonable or probable cause. Held, that the plaint was properly rejected, and that there was no good ground for allowing the plaint to be amended, the plaintiff having delayed the filing of it until the last day but one allowed by the law of limitation. *GIRDHARLAL DAYALDAS v. The Courts upon the Amin's report gave A the option to amend the plaint by withdrawing the suit against any particular sets of defendants. A elected to go to trial on the suit as brought, and it was dismissed. Held, that, having regard to the provisions of ss. 31 and 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, the proper order of the Court should have been to reject the plaint and not dismiss the suit on the ground of misjoinder. *SUDHENDU MOHUN ROY v. The defendant subsequently applied for execution of this decree. The trustees, to whom the debtor's assets were made over under the deed, together with the debtors, now brought a suit in the same Court for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing or proceeding to execute his decree. The plaint was rejected by the District Judge after it had been registered and numbered, and a written statement had been filed. Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to reject the plaint under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 54, at that stage of the suit. *VENKATESA TAWKER v. In his confession he stated that he had killed his wife, because she quarrelled with him and objected to go to another village where he proposed a change of house on account of their poverty. He adhered to this statement when placed for trial before the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to death, subject to confirmation by the High Court. Held (per JARDINE and CANDY, JJ.), that the accused's statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge of murdering his wife. He alleged a sudden provocation: he ought therefore to have been put on his trial, in order that the Court might ascertain whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 8. ———— Pleaders and their clients, their rights and obligations inter se—Bom. Reg. II of 1887—Confidential communications made in the course of professional employment. The rules prevailing in England with regard to the rights and obligations of solicitors in relation to their clients apply, with slight difference, to pleaders practising in India. The principles deducible from the English cases are as follows: (i) A party to a judicial proceeding is entitled to such professional assistance as he thinks will best suit him. (ii) A pleader is free to place his services at the disposal of any such party upon such terms as he may think most advantageous to himself consistently with the honour of his profession and the due administration of justice. (iii) A pleader who receives any confidential information from his client in the course of his professional employment is not at liberty to carry that information into the service of his antagonist, or any one who in that very litigation or in any subsequent litigation may be opposed to the client furnishing the information. (iv) Under Regulation II of 1827, pleaders receive certain fees, in return for which they are not at liberty to act against those retaining them, whether they are retained by one client singly or by two or more clients jointly. A pleader who has acted for several persons will not be restrained from afterwards acting for some of them only as against the others, unless it be shown that he is possessed of knowledge arising from his previous employment which might be prejudicial to his other clients. As a general rule, the Court will require a very strong case to be made out before it will interfere by way of injunction, restraining a pleader from appearing for a client, and there must be clear affidavits made to show that special knowledge was acquired by the pleader during his employment by the former client. In case of his possessing such knowledge, he will not be allowed to throw up the conduct of the case and transfer his services. He will never be allowed to discharge himself from the conduct of the case if the case raises even a probability of prejudice to his former employers. K, a pleader, was at first retained by P and N jointly to defend a suit on their behalf. At a later stage of the case, P and N quarrelled. Thereupon K applied to the Court for leave to withdraw from the conduct of the case, on the ground that he could not attend to the interests of both P and N. The Court allowed him to withdraw. A few days afterwards K appeared in Court, and filed a vakalatnama, or warrant of attorney, signed by N, and claimed to conduct the case on behalf of N alone. P objected to this, but the Court disallowed this objection. Thereupon P made an application to the High Court for an injunction restraining K from acting on behalf of N alone. Held, that, as it was not made out that K was in possession of any confidential information either from P or from P and N together, such as would give him an unfair advantage when acting on behalf of N, the Court would not interfere or restrain K from serving N alone. Held, further, that a pleader in such circumstances should take the direction of the Court as to which of two or more clients he is to serve, and as to the disposal of the fees he has received from them jointly. *PALLONJI MERWANJI v. Plaintiff's pleader, however, sent intimation to the Court in writing that he had been appointed to act as a Subordinate Judge, and as he was going that day to join his appointment, he was unable to attend the Court. He therefore requested that the case should be adjourned till his return, or that a notice be issued to his client to enable him to make the necessary arrangements for the conduct of his case. Held, that the

Neither ss. 2 and 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) nor ss. 38 and 76 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) give the pleaders of the Bombay High Court that right. The provisions of s. 47 of Regulation II of 1827, authorizing persons holding sanads from the High Court to practise in the mofussil Courts, are still in force. Per BAYLEY, WEST, PINHEY, and LATHAM, JJ.—S. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, does not give every pleader a title to appear and plead; it only enacts that "pleader" means every person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court. Consequently, if pleaders or vakils, who are the same class of practitioners, are not entitled by law to appear or plead for another in Court, the definition of "pleader" gives them no new right or status. The words in s. 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) "by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf," do not simply mean a person duly appointed by the party in the suit, but a pleader duly appointed according to the law regarding pleaders in force in particular Court. Per PINHEY, SCOTT, and LATHAM, JJ. (WEST, J., dissentiente).—The High Court has the power of making rules for the admission of pleaders to practise in the Bombay Court of Small Causes; and the Bombay Court of Small Causes, under s. 9 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) also has power of making similar rules with the sanction of the High Court. In re PLEADERS OF THE HIGH COURT, BOMBAY. The suit was numbered, and, after the evidence on either side had been gone into, the trying Court made an order dispaupering R. On an application by R, who offered to pay the Court-fees, the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction made an order directing the lower Court to receive the fees and to proceed with the suit. R paid the fees, but the suit was compromised. The plaintiff did not attend to the suit after remand. The plaintiff having sued the defendant for his fees, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that one-fourth fee under s. 6 of Act I of 1846 should be awarded to the plaintiff. On reference to the High Court:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a quantum meruit, which was to be determined with reference to all the circumstances of the case, there being no express agreement in the case. KESHAV GOVIND JOSHI v. 12. ———— Suit by pleader to recover fee from client—Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 27, 28, 29, 30—Agreement for fee—Agreement not in writing and filed in Court. Ss. 27, 28, and 29 of the Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879) do not relate to any arrangements or agreement made between a litigant and his own pleader as to the receipt of his fees which are actually allowed upon taxation. They do not provide as to matters which relate to the opposite party, or the fees that he has to pay to the legal practitioner of the opposite party, but provide what as between the pleader and his client, shall be the method in which certain special arrangements are to be entered into. They make provision for arrangements between pleaders and their clients, which relate to the payment of remuneration in excess of and apart from the amount allowed in the taxation, and were framed upon the principle which regards with jealous scrutiny contracts brought about by persons holding positions of active confidence towards others, such as a pleader necessarily occupies in reference to his client. They were intended to protect necessitous, improvident, or careless litigants from being taken advantage of by unscrupulous legal advisers. Rama v. Kunji, I. L. Previously to November 1885, B sold an 8-anna share of his interest in the disputed land to C, who at the time of his purchase had notice of the order of the 21st of May 1883. In November 1885 B and others went to the disputed lands, and attempted to turn A out of possession by force, and to compel the tenants of the lands to pay rent and give kabuliats to B and C. At the time that B and his companions went to the disputed land, the latter were aware of the order of the 21st of May 1883, though none of them was a party to the enquiry then made by the District Magistrate. In December 1885 they were all tried and found guilty of disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant. Held, that the conviction was right. GOLUCK CHANDRA PAL v. KALI CHARAN DE

The Judicial Committee concurred substantially in the conclusions of the High Court that this was an incitement within s. 116 (abetment) of the Penal Code to commit an offence made penal by s. 36 (which was a special law within s. 41 of that Code) of Act XVIII of 1879, the Legal Practitioners' Act. A pleader who presides at a public meeting and therein procures the passing of a resolution contemptuously denouncing or protesting against the conduct of a High Court Judge in passing sentence at a trial at the Criminal Sessions, is guilty of misbehaviour (under 56 of Regulation II of 1827). GOVERNMENT PLEADER v. on her mortgage, brought the mortgage-property to sale; and her vakil bid through an agent at Court-sale and became the purchaser. It appeared that the vakil had not informed his client that he intended to bid nor obtained the sanction of the Court, but he had been instructed by his client and had obtained the permission of the Court to bid on her account, and he was found to have acted in an underhand manner towards her. In a suit to set aside the sale brought by the mortgagor, who had sought unsuccessfully to obtain the same relief by means of a petition under s. 311 in which fraud was not alleged against the purchaser:—Held (on its appearing that the vakil had not discharged the burden which lay on him of proving that the transaction was free from suspicion), that the sale should be set aside. SUBBARAYUDU v. 7. PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT.

1. ———— Disciplinary jurisdiction—Pleader making use in later proceedings against A of information obtained by him in an earlier case in which A was his client. With regard to its disciplinary jurisdiction over pleaders, the High Court of Bombay will follow the rule laid down by BLACKBURN, J., in the case of Re Cutts, 16 L. T. (N. S.) 715, which was as follows: "Those things which an attorney earns from his client, or in consequence of his employment by his client, he is forbidden to disclose, and any betrayal of his confidence would be visited by the Court as gross misconduct. But if he learns matters relating to his client under such circumstances that, if questioned about them in a Court of justice, he could not refuse to answer them, he is not within our jurisdiction." This rule should not be taken by pleaders as the standard by which to regulate their professional behaviour. It serves only to indicate the extreme low-water mark of professional conduct. DAMODAR VENKATESH v. BHAVANISHANKAR MANGESH (1902) . . . . . I. L. R. 26 Bom. 423

The pleader drew the money out of Court, appropriated it to his own purposes, and, when asked, failed to hand it over to his client. Held, that the pleader had acted in a grossly improper manner in the discharge of his professional duties. In the matter of PURNA CHANDRA DUTT (1903)

2. Object of pleadings—Issue not in terms fixed, but afterwards raised—Appointment of the religious superior of a Mahomedan institution—Custom as to such appointment. The object of any system of pleading is that each side may be made fully aware of the questions that are about to be argued, in order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues. The claim here made was that the last preceding sajjadanashin, acting according to the custom of the institution of which he was the religious superior and manager, had appointed the plaintiff to succeed him on his decease. The finding of the first Court that he had this power by the custom was affirmed on this appeal. As to the fact of the appointment, it was not apparent at what stage of the suit the question had first been raised, whether the deceased had been of sound and disposing mind at the time of making it. The first Court found that he had been of sound mind at the time; but the Chief Court on appeal reversed this finding, and added that he had been in their opinion, unduly influenced. As these questions, though not formally stated in the issues, had been sufficiently open upon the proceedings to give to each Court a right to form a judgment upon them, the Judicial Committee, decided which was correct, and affirmed the finding of the first Court as to the soundness of mind of the deceased. PLEDGOR AND PLEDGEE.

——— Pledgee taking over the property pledged crediting the value as if it had been sold to him—Wrongful conversion—Absence of proof of damages to pledgor—Account—Interest. Where a pledgee, having power to sell for default, takes over, as if upon a sale to himself, the property pledged without the authority of the pledgor, but crediting its value in account with him, this act, though an unauthorized conversion, does not put an end to the contract of pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have the property back without payment. Government paper having been deposited by a borrower from a Bank as security, part was legally sold upon his failing to comply with the terms between them. As to the rest, the borrower, afterwards on redeeming a part, was led to believe that the paper returned was the whole of that which remained unsold in the bank's possession. The bank, however, had taken over part, as if sold to itself, crediting the price. Held, that the bank could not after this treat the securities as still subject to the pledge; although this transaction had not put an end to the contract of pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have back the paper without payment of the loan and interest. The bank was no longer a pledgee of this paper, but, having converted it to the bank's own use, might have been liable in damages for the value, including the interest thereon. However, had this liability been enforced, the pledgor could not have had credit in the loan account for the proceeds of the paper. The cessation of interest on the loan was more to his advantage than to receive the interest on the paper, the market value of which was also falling, so that the longer the account had been kept open, the greater the balance would have been against the pledgor. It followed that there was no evidence of damage to him resulting from the conversion. The first Court decreed an account, wrongly deciding that interest could not run upon the loan, which the amount of the paper transferred by the bank to itself purported to wipe off, from the date of the transfer. On this point, as well as because there was no proof of damage to the pledgor, the High Court, reversing that decree, had rightly dismissed the pledgor's suit. NECKRAM DOBAY v. BANK OF BENGAL . I. A Police Inspector accompanied by some police went to their village and informed them that they had been so appointed, and requested them to accompany him to the police station of B, which they declined to do. The Inspector then had N arrested, whereupon N shook himself free, and N, S and G, with other persons who had assembled, abused and threatened the police and compelled them to withdraw from the village. N, S and G were convicted under s. 17 of the Police Act, and they were also convicted with other persons under s. 353, read with s. 149 of the Penal Code. Held, that the refusal of N, S and G to accompany the Inspector constituted no offence under s. 19 of the Police Act, as the order was intended, not for any purpose of police duty, but simply that they might obtain the authority of their appointment and the necessary arms. Held, further, that the refusal of N to accompany the Inspector was not an offence for which N could be arrested, and, as the police when obstructed were not acting in lawful discharge of their duty, none of the persons concerned could be convicted of an offence under s. 353 of the Penal Code, but that they were guilty of rioting under s. 147 of that Code. *Empress v. He was arrested and convicted under s. 29, Act V of 1861, for disobeying the orders of his superior officer, and withdrawing from his duties without permission. Held, that his conviction was illegal; after suspension, he was no longer a police officer under s. 8 of the Act, and therefore

8. ——— Neglect to act on information while on other duty. A police officer charged under s. 19, Act V of 1861, with a violation of his duties in not acting on information given to him of the likelihood of a breach of the peace, which afterwards actually occurred set up in defence that he was, when he received the information, engaged bona fide in duties as a police officer in regard to another offence. He was, however, found guilty and convicted. Held, the conviction was illegal. For a conviction under s. 29, more than mere neglect of duty must be shown; a deliberate and intentional violation of his duty is necessary. QUEEN v. RADHU SINGH

10. ——— Extra drill. Police constable—"Neglect of duty"—"Lawful order." A District Superintendent of Police directed his constables to cut down the jungle in the vicinity of their lines, and on their refusal to comply ordered them extra drill every day. One of such constables not turning out to such extra drill was thereupon prosecuted and convicted of neglect of duty under s. 29, Act V of 1861. Held, that s. 29 provided for no such offence, and that any neglect of duty short of a violation of duty does not amount to an offence under that section. Held, further, that the omission to attend such extra drill did not amount to an offence under that section, as the words "lawful order" used in the section mean an order which the authority mentioned therein is competent to make, and it did not appear that a District Superintendent of Police was competent to order his constables to cut down the jungle in the vicinity of their lines, and, on their refusal to do so, to order them extra drill. In the matter of the petition of BHOLA NATH DAS

of—A rule or regulation and a lawful order distinguished. There is no express power given by Act V of 1861 to any officer save the Inspector-General of Police to make rules; therefore the violation of a general rule alleged to have been made by a District Superintendent of Police to the effect that constables are to be within the lines at a particular time or at roll-call is not punishable under s. 29 of the Act. Semble: The violation of a special order made by a District Superintendent of Police requiring the presence of an officer or of certain officers within the police lines and issued expressly to him or each of them would come within s. 29 of the Act as being not "a rule or regulation," but a "lawful order" made by a competent authority and relating to the duties of the officer or officers. *In the matter of the petition of ABDUL HOSSEIN. 13. ——— and s. 8—Suspension, effect of—Police officer—Breach of order. A police constable was suspended and ordered to remain in the lines during suspension. Despite the order, he absented himself therefrom without leave. He was convicted under s. 29 of Act V of 1861. Held, s. 29 of Act V of 1861 contemplates that the person to be charged with an offence under it must have been, at the time of his doing the act in respect of which the charge is preferred, a police constable within the meaning of that Act. When a police officer is suspended, he ceases to be a police officer; the conviction was therefore wrong. Queen v. Dinonath Gangooly, 8 B. L. R. Ap. 58, followed. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DURGA

1. ——— s. 34—Slaughter of cow—Police Act Amendment Act (VIII of 1895), s. 13—Slaughter of cow—Open verandah—Annoyance to residents of locality—"Open place," meaning of—General police. The slaughtering of a cow in an open verandah, so as to cause annoyance to the residents of the locality, and in spite of their remonstrances, is a breach of the law, being an act in an "open place" within the terms of s. 34 of Act V of 1861 as amended by Act VIII of 1895. The words "open place," coupled with "road, street, or thoroughfare," should not be interpreted ejusdem generis. It seems rather that the addition of these words was intended to have a wider significance, and this is shown by another amendment in the same section made at the same time in which the annoyance, etc., caused must be not to the residents and passengers, but to the residents or passengers. The intention of the Legislature was to extend the Act not only to passengers who would not be on such a road, street or thoroughfare, but to residents, who are not passengers. *KHAN BAPUTI DEWAN v. Held, that under these circumstances the defendant was not entitled to receive notice of suit either under s. 42 of the Police Act, 1861, or under s. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the plaintiff's suit was not liable to dismissal for lack of such notice. *Shahebzadee Shahunshah Begum v. Detention in police custody—Duration of detention—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 167 (3)—Order for such detention. S. 167 (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by requiring a Magistrate to record his reasons for authorising detention in police custody contemplates that the Magistrate shall consider whether on the facts placed before him there are good grounds for allowing such detention. There should at least be something to satisfy the Magistrate that the presence of the person arrested while the police investigation was being held would assist in some discovery of evidence and that his presence was indispensable for this purpose, as, for instance, when he had confessed before the Magistrate and had pointed out some of the property stolen in the offence and was wanting to do more but was unable to do so because the police were by law unable without a special order to detain him. In ordering further detention in police custody when there are good reasons for such an order a Magistrate should invariably limit the term as much as possible to what may be necessary for the object in view. *EMPEROR v. V OF 1870).—concl'd.

_____ explained—Highway—Statutory Road—Dedication
—Public user—Animus dedicandi—Power to dedicate, whether the Port Commissioners have any.
Certain lands acquired in 1874 for “a public purpose” under the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 in conjunction with the Port Commissioners’ Act of 1870, were conveyed to the Port Commissioners for value in 1876. A road constructed on a portion of these lands was used by the general public from the date of its completion in 1875 till 1881. On the Port Commissioners erecting a fencing in 1903, obstructing access from adjoining premises to the road, a suit was instituted by the owners of the adjoining premises for the declaration of a private right of access to the road as a public highway and for incidental relief. Held, that a public right of way may be created either by Act of the Legislature or by dedication, express or presumed by the owner of the land, to the general public. The acquisition in suit did not create any public statutory road. The declaration of a “public purpose” did not make the road a public road.
The “public purpose” was under s. 38 of the Port Commissioners’ Act of 1870, for the purposes of that Act. By the conveyance the land became vested in the Port Commissioners. In order to constitute a valid dedication to the public of a highway, by the owner of the soil, there must be an animus dedicandi, of which user
by the public is evidence and no more. Poole v.

Suit for damages for breach of contract. P. & Co.,

order with G for freight, with option to G to cancel the contract if the F A should not arrive at the port of Calcutta by the 15th of January. On that day she anchored at Atcheepore, and remained there till the morning of the 16th. G refused to fulfil the contract, and P & Co. sued him thereupon. Held, that there is no custom governing the construction of the words “the port of Calcutta” in shipping orders; and that an arrival at Atcheepore is not an arrival at the port of Calcutta. POTTER v. GENTLE

The Local Government had made a rule with reference to s. 6 (k) of the above Act requiring boat owners to "carry out at all times all orders issued by the Conservator in connection with the plying of their boats, and which are not inconsistent with the regulation issued by Government." A charge was brought against two persons, being the owner and tindals of licensed cargo boats, for neglecting to obey the aforesaid order, and they were convicted, under the Indian Ports Act, s. 8 (2), by the Conservator in his capacity as special first class Magistrate. Held, that the order was ultra vires, and the conviction was accordingly illegal. Per Curiam:—A public body, whether the Executive Government or a corporation, being entrusted by the Legislature with the duty of making rules, cannot relieve itself of the responsibility and depute other agencies to discharge the duty. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. POSSESSION—contd.

1. EVIDENCE OF POSSESSION.

1. ——— Statement as to fact of possession—Evidence. A statement by a witness that a party was in possession is, in point of law, admissible evidence of the fact that such party was in possession. MANIRAM DEB v. DEBI CHARAN DEB
4 B. L. R. F. B. 97: 13 W. R. F. B. 42

2. ——— Acts of ownership. A witness's statement that a party "is in possession" is no evidence of the fact. The question of possession is a mixed one of law and fact, and the evidence produced must give the various acts of ownership which go to constitute possession so that the Court may arrive at its own conclusion. ISHAN CHANDER BEHARA v. RAM LOCHAN BEHARA
9 W. R. 79

3. ——— Visiting and making use of house—Possession as of right. Occasionally visiting and making use of a house is ample evidence of possession, unless shown to have been done by the claimant in the capacity of a visitor, and not in his own right. UNUNTO RAM SEAL v. BROJO BULLUB SEAL
11 W. R. 136

4. ——— Acts of ownership—Omission to show acts of ownership. In special appeal, the High Court held that evidence which did not allude to any specific acts of ownership was not sufficient evidence to prove possession. The finding of the fact of possession by the lower Appellate Court upon such evidence reversed on special appeal. JAGABANDHU DAS GAJENDRA MAHAPATRA v. DINABANDHU DAS GAJENDRA MAHAPATRA
2 B. L. R. Ap. 30

5. ——— Suit for recovery of forest land from Government. Where a tract of land with a defined boundary has been throughout claimed by a person as owner, and acts of ownership have been done on various portions of it, such acts may be accepted as evidence of the possession of the whole tract. Bhaskarappa v. Collector of North Kanara, I. L. R. 3 Bom. 452, distinguished. SIVASUBRAMANYA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA
I. L. R. 9 Mad. 285

6. ——— Thakbust award—Boundary, question of. A thakbust award of boundary would in any case be material evidence of possession. PRAHLAD SEN v. RAJENDRA KISHORE SINGH
2 B. L. R. P. C. 111, 137: 12 W. R. P. C. 6
11 Moo. I. A. 293

7. ——— Survey proceedings—Survey by revenue authorities—Records in Government maps. Plaintiff sued in 1876 to recover certain alluvial lands which had been in existence over twelve years, together with recent accretions thereto which he alleged, appertained to his talukh. The alluvial land had been surveyed by the revenue authorities in 1863 as appertaining to no permanently-settled estate, and claimed by the Government. The plaintiff's predecessor, however, subsequently in 1864 laid claim to the lands; and the Collector, abandoning the claim of Government recorded him in the Government maps and papers as proprietor

in possession. Held, that, although the fact of the land having been measured by the revenue authorities as appurtenant to a certain talukh is prima facie evidence of possession of that land at the time of the survey, no presumption from the survey proceedings could arise in favour of the plaintiff in 1863. KUSSESSUR ROY v. JOGGODISHURY
7 C. L. R. 269

8. ——— Measurement of land by Government officers. The evidence of Government having sent its officers to measure the land and to surround it with pillars is the very best evidence of possession of a lately-formed chur. COLLECTOR OF FURREEDPORE v. KALEE DOSS HAZRAH
17 W. R. 195

9. ——— Decree for rent—Subsequent suit for possession. A decree against the registered tenant, in a suit for rent against him and another, is not conclusive evidence of the possession of such tenant, as between him and the other, in a subsequent civil action. HURRO NATH BHUTTACHARJEE v. HARVEY
25 W. R. 23

10. ——— Receipt of rent—Failure to show collection of rent for portion of property. Receipt of rent is good evidence of possession, but it does not necessarily follow that a party in possession has been disturbed because he cannot prove that he has collected rent of a particular portion of the property. PUDAR BINDOO MAHANJEE v. MOHESH CHUNDER SEN
20 W. R. 183

Receipt of rent is only evidence of possession. ABDOOL ALI v. ABDOOR RUHMAN
21 W. R. 429

11. ——— Receipt for revenue. Possession of receipts for Government revenue, though evidence of possession does not prove it. LALLEE SINGH v. AMRIT KOOR
17 W. R. 490

12. ——— Registration of tenure—Suit for possession—Registration under Beng. Act VIII of 1876. Quære: Whether, in a suit founded upon possession alone, or in which the relief sought depends solely upon possession, registration under Bengal Act VII of 1876 ought not to be treated as prima facie evidence of actual possession at the date when the registration was effected. RAM BUSHAN MAHTO v. JEBLI MAHTO
I. L. R. 8 Calc. 853

13. ——— Decision of Collector—Beng. Act VII of 1876, s. 55. 15. ————— Dispute as to possession between purchaser from heir and grantees from widows—Effect of decision of Magistrate as to possession. In a former suit appellant sought as purchaser from the heir to a former proprietor to establish her mokurari right to certain lands as against the grantees from the widows of such proprietor, upon the death of the last surviving widow. She obtained a decree establishing such right, and, on proceeding to take out execution, was opposed by the respondents, who claimed the lands as being a patni tenure which had been sold by auction for arrears of rent due by B S, the former patnidar, and which had been purchased by K B and H B, who had granted a dar-patni of the same to the respondents in 1849. In 1841 there was a proceeding before the Magistrate as between the grantees of the dar-mokurari right under the widows and B S, the patnidar, the result of which investigation was that the Magistrate quitted the former in possession as dar-mokuraridars under the widows, and ordered the patnidar to institute a suit in the Civil Court to enforce his claim, which suit was never brought. The claim of the respondents was tried as a regular suit between the objectors (respondents) as plaintiffs and the decree-holder (appellant) as defendant, and was decided in favour of the respondents in the lower Courts. On appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships held that the proceeding in 1841 was conclusive of the present case, as showing that the actual possession then was in the grantees of the widows; that it was in the highest degree improbable that they, having established their possessory right against B S, would, without a struggle, have allowed themselves to be turned out of possession by their relatives as purchaser of the same B S's right; that the possession of the grantee was obtained and continued under the widow's title, and was referable solely to the title which was now vested in the appellant; and that the right of the appellant should in nowise be affected by the acquisition of the patni title in 1849. *SHEROO COOMAREE DEBIA v. A suit for damages for the value of fruit crops taken away by the defendant from a garden alleged to be in the plaintiff's possession can be sustained on the finding that the plaintiff was in possession up to the date of the institution of the suit: it is not necessary for him to prove his title to the land, unless the defendant shows a better title. In this case, there being no sufficient findings of the plaintiff's possession to the date of suit, nor that the defendant had failed to show the better title, the suit was remanded for such findings. *LEP SINGH KHASIA v. 18. Limitation—Unoccupied and uncultivated land. Where land, the right to which is disputed, has been uninhabited and uncultivated, and no acts of ownership by any person can be proved to have been exercised over it, it is often necessary, for the purpose of deciding the question of limitation, to rely upon slight evidence of possession, and sometimes possession of the adjoining land, coupled with evidence of title, such as grants of leases; and the Courts are justified in presuming, under such circumstances, that the party who has the title has also the possession. But where the land has been occupied it is generally proper, for purposes of limitation, to deal with the question of possession as distinct from the question of title; for while the title may be in one person, a twelve years' possession may have barred that title. Act (XIV of 1859)—Bom. Reg. V of 1827, s. 1—Prescription—Adverse possession. Some lands in the village of Shirasgam in the Puna Collectorate commonly called "Kholhati Bawas Inam," originally belonged to His Highness Scindia. Plaintiff's family were proved to have been in actual possession of them from 1841 to 1854, and in constructive possession during their attachment by the Inam Commission from 1854 to 1863, when, by a mistake in carrying out the orders of the British Government, the lands passed into the possession of Scindia and remained with His Highness till 1872, in which year the British Government, by exchange of lands, came into possession. In a suit brought on 29th July 1872:—Held, that the plaintiff's possession, not extending over thirty years, gave him no proprietary title under s. 1 of Regulation V of 1827, which, as a law of positive prescription, was not repealed by Act XIV of 1859. Under the former Limitation Act twelve years' adverse possession barred the suit without extinguishing the title: so that, if a proprietor who had been out of possession for more than twelve years happened to regain it the person who had been in adverse possession must fail in any suit to eject the proprietor, unless he sued within six months under s. 15 of the Act. The effect of Act IX of 1871, s. 29, however, is not merely to bar the remedy, but to extinguish the title of the original proprietor after twelve years of a possession adverse to him. *RAMBHAT AGNIHOTRI v. sued to recover possession of certain lands held by the defendants within the talukh. The defence was that the lands in question were held by the defendants under a pottah which had been granted to their ancestor in 1733 by the then talukhdars in respect of certain services to be performed by the grantees and their descendants. The Court of first instance found that the pottah was genuine, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge found that the pottah was a forgery; and that, although the lands had been granted to the defendants' ancestor in respect of services, yet the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession, as he did not require the services to be performed. He therefore decreed the plaintiff's claim. Held, that the decree was right, for having found that the pottah on which the defendants chiefly relied was a forgery, the Subordinate Judge was not bound, as a matter of law, to presume that the tenure was a permanent one merely from the fact of long possession of the lands. NOBIN CHUNDER DUTT v. In 1881 she brought a possessory suit against the first defendant in the Mamlatdar's Court, which suit was dismissed in January 1885, the Mamlatdar holding that she had not been in possession. In a civil suit, however, which (pending the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court) she had filed against the first defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Haveri, the Judge found that she had been in possession since 1880, and awarded her damages against the first defendant (who was held to be her farm servant) for crops which had been taken away by him. In 1887 the second defendant as mortgagee from defendant No. 1 obtained a decree against plaintiff in the Mamlatdar's Court awarding him possession of the land, and in execution of that decree the plaintiff was dispossessed in December 1887. In 1890 the plaintiff filed this suit to recover possession and for mesne profits since 1887. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had no title to the land, and that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not brought a suit to establish her right within three years after the Mamlatdar's order in 1885 dismissing her posses-

Plaintiff in an action for ejectment must not only prove his title, but also his possession, actual or constructive, within 12 years of suit. When the plaintiff has established his title it is not necessary for the defendant to prove a better title or establish that he has acquired a good title by adverse possession, which has extinguished the title of the plaintiff, but the plaintiff must prove his possession also within twelve years. Nature of evidence required in such cases discussed. Revenue Survey Maps are evidence of title and possession. They are not conclusive and may be shown to be wrong, but in the absence of evidence to the contrary they may be properly and judicially received in evidence as correct when made. The doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of the rightful owner, and must not, as a rule, be extended to the wrong-doer, whose possession must be confined to land, of which he is actually in possession. MIRZA SHAMSHER BAHADUR v. 3. ———— Possession without executing decree for possession. So long as a plaintiff obtains possession after a decree establishing his right to it, it is immaterial for the purpose of limitation whether he obtained it by executing his decree, or whether possession was yielded to him. 5. ———— Decree for possession, non-execution of—Title—Possession taken by rightful owner without Court's intervention—Trespass—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9. B purchased land from M and subsequently brought a suit against M to obtain possession. He got a decree, but did not execute it within three years. M died, and after his death and while his daughter (the plaintiff) was a minor, B took forcible possession of the land. Eight years afterwards the plaintiff attained her majority, and she then filed this suit to recover the land. The lower Court held that B, having failed to execute his decree for possession, was wrong in taking possession during the minority of the plaintiff, without the intervention of a Court; that in so doing he was trespasser; and that the plaintiff as M's heir was entitled to have possession given to her, until ousted in due course of law. Held (reversing the decree), that, subject to the provision of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) there is no reason for holding that in India the rightful owner dispossessing another is a trespasser, and may not rely for the support of his possession

15. ————— Formal possession—Fresh period of limitation—Act VIII of 1859, s. 224. Delivery of possession by going through the process prescribed by s. 224 of Act VIII of 1859 is the only way in which the decree of the Court awarding possession to the plaintiff can be enforced; and as, in contemplation of law, both parties must be considered as being present at the time when the delivery is made, such delivery must, as against the defendant, be deemed equivalent to actual possession. As against third parties, such symbolical possession is of no avail, because they are not parties to the proceedings. of Act VIII of 1859, instead of under s. 223. Held, that, as the plaintiff was put in possession under his decree by the officer of the Court, the form in which execution was given was immaterial. I. L. R. 5 Calc. 331

18. ————— Symbolical possession—Limitation—Fresh cause of action. Symbolical possession given under a decree does not, as against third parties, entitle the person to whom such possession has been given to count a fresh period of limitation from the date of the possession. A person who prefers a claim to property attached under a decree, but whose claim is disallowed, is not a party to the decree; and the decree-holder, on obtaining symbolical possession, will not be entitled to count a fresh period of limitation as against him. *DOYANDIHI PANDA v. were the shevaks or ministers of the deity. The plaintiff sued to oust the defendants from a certain piece of land attached to the temple, alleging that the defendants had erected shops on the land, and appropriated the rents to their own use, although it had been already decided in a suit between the parties that the land was always to be kept open and unoccupied for the use of the temple. The shevaks contended that they had been in exclusive and uninterrupted possession of the land in dispute for more than twelve years, and that by reason of such user they had acquired a quasi-proprietary title at least as against the manager of the temple. They therefore pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. Held, that the defendants had not by occupation and user acquired any title as against the plaintiff who was the manager of the temple estate. They had come into occupation originally as servants and representatives of the deity, and during their occupation they could not by a wish change the nature of their possession. Both they and the plaintiff held the land for the same deity, and their rights could not be adverse to each other so as to give rise to a title by prescription. The only question then was as to which of them was the proper representative of the deity for the particular purpose of this suit, and that question had already been decided in a former suit in favour of the plaintiff. *MULJI BHULABHAI v. 35. ——— Separation in living and separation by partition. In a suit to recover a share in certain land, it was contended that there had been a separation between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the suit was barred by limitation. Held, that the suit was not barred, as the separation, even if proved, was only a separation in living and not a separation by actual partition, and therefore the defendant's possession was not adverse to the plaintiff. *NARAYAN BABAJI DABHOLKAR v. I. L. R. 3 Mad. 212

37. ——— Possession by one member of family—Neglect by plaintiff to take possession of his share notwithstanding request that he would do so—Limitation. The plaintiff and the defendant were brothers and members of an undivided family. The plaintiff was in Government service, and had been for a long time absent from his native place on duty, the family property remaining under the management of the defendant. In 1863 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff, requesting him to return and manage his share of the property, or to employ some one to manage it for him. Nothing, however, was done by the plaintiff in the matter, and the defendant continued in possession. In 1882 the plaintiff sued the defendant for partition. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred, contending that he had been in adverse possession from the date of the letter. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree, holding that the suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court:—Held, that the suit was not barred. The above-mentioned letter of the defendant showed that, up to the date at which it was written, the defendant had not been in possession of the property as his own property to the exclusion of the plaintiff, and the mere circumstance that subsequently to the date of the letter the plaintiff had not participated in the profits would not, in the absence of other evidence, justify the inference that the plaintiff was then excluded. *DINKAR SADASHIV v. tion. One A formerly owned the house and land in dispute. He sold it to G, who sold it to the plaintiff. A, however, continued in occupation of the property. In 1879 the plaintiff sued A and G for possession and obtained a decree. On the 6th April 1880, in execution of the decree, he was put in formal possession by the Court under s. 263 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) in the presence of A, who made no objection. At the time of these proceedings A's sons (the present defendants) were living with him in the house and they continued to do so subsequently. A died in 1885, and his sons continued in possession of the property and cultivated it. On the 4th April 1892 the plaintiff brought this suit to eject them. They pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, contending that the execution-proceedings in 1880 did not bind them, as they were not parties to that suit. Held, that, as the present suit would not have been barred against A had he survived, it was not barred against the defendants, whose rights were derived from him. The defendants living with their father had no independent juridical possession of the premises. The father A was the only person in possession. The possession which the plaintiff obtained through the Court from A in 1880 operated as well against the defendants (A's sons) as against A himself. PANDHARINATH v. MAHABUBKAN

39. ———— Limitation—Possession under gift making valid title. Of two brothers of a Mitakshara family, the younger who had been born deaf and dumb was disqualified from inheriting, but the action of the elder to the younger was such as to recognise for some years that the younger had a joint interest in the family property, although it was found that there was no intention shown by the acts of the elder brother to waive the rights accruing to him in consequence of his brother's disqualification. The brothers died and also a daughter of the elder brother, who was their only descendant. This daughter had an only son, who died before her, after taking, however, the whole family estate under a gift made to him with his mother's assent by his maternal grandfather in 1867. In 1882 the plaintiff, a collateral relation, sued the widow of the donee to obtain the estate of the younger of the brothers. The widow made title under the gift to her deceased husband, followed by his possession, and hers afterwards, since the date of the gift. Upon the facts found, the suit was held to be barred by limitation. LALA MUDDUN GOPAL LAL v. KHIKINDA KOER. I. L. R. 18 Calc. 341 died and her reversioner applied to be made and was admitted as her kaem mukam to carry on the appeal on her behalf. In March 1875, less than twelve years from the expiration of such lease, the plaintiffs brought a suit for possession against B and the talukhdars of the estate of which the lands in dispute formed part. The latter alleged that the lakhiraj title of the plaintiff was invalid; that although no proceedings, as required by the Rent law, had been taken to invalidate the plaintiff's title, they, the talukhdars, had resumed possession of the land by receiving the rents from B from 1859; and that the suit was barred by reason of their possession since that date. Held, that the suit was not barred, inasmuch as nothing had occurred to determine the tenancy which existed between the plaintiff and B, and that the possession of the latter was in law the plaintiff's possession. *PARBUTTI DASSI v. Nine years afterwards, and without any demand having been made by R, K died, and his heirs continued to occupy the house apparently on the same terms as K had done. In a suit brought by R against the heirs of K to recover possession of the house:—Held, that K occupied the house as tenant-at-will of R; that such tenancy was, on the death of K, as of course, converted into an adverse occupation by the heirs of K, in the absence of proof of the intention of the parties to that effect, and in the absence of anything to show that R did not assent to the heirs of K continuing to hold on the same terms as K had done. *RADHABHAI v. 49. ———— Continued possession by heirs of tenant—Non-payment of rent, effect of, after expiration of lease—Permissive possession—Limitation. In 1840 the land in dispute was leased to R for life. R died in or about 1871, and after R's death his heirs (the defendants) continued in possession without obtaining a fresh lease or paying any rent to the landlord. In 1888 the landlord sued to eject the defendants. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation. Held, that the suit was not barred. After R's death, the defendants, though not in possession as tenants, were not trespassers. Their possession was permissive, and not adverse until they expressly set up a title of ownership in the property. KRISHNAJI RAMCHANDRA v. ANTAJI PANDURANG . . . . . I. L. R. 18 Bom. 256

51. ———— Adverse possession of a partial interest (e.g., a tenant's) in land—Title by adverse possession asserted by a plaintiff against the true owner as well as alleged as a defence—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 28 and Art. 144. Adverse possession for more than twelve years by one claiming to hold land as its full owner not only extinguishes the title of the true owner to the land so held and debars him from suing for its recovery, but creates a title by negation in the occupant which he can actively assert, if he loses possession, even against the true owner. A partial interest in land may be lost by adverse possession as well as the whole interest, and the right to such partial interest may be asserted by suit. So, where a landlord seeks to recover from his tenant possession of land in his tenant's occupancy, and the latter alleging a perpetual tenancy successfully resists on that ground the landlord's attempt to dispossess him, the tenant may, after the statutory period has expired, plead limitation in bar of a subsequent suit in ejectment by the landlord. A landlord allowing the tenant to assert the validity of an invalid lease for the statutory period of more than twelve years may be debarred from subsequently questioning the right of the tenant to hold under its terms. *BUDESAB v. 52. ———— Bhagdari estate—Alienation by a bhagdar of his share—Bom. Act I of 1862, s. 3—Collector setting aside sale of share—Subsequent suit to recover share—Limitation. In the year 1871 the plaintiff, a co-sharer in a bhag, alienated his share to a stranger. In the year 1882 the Collector declared the alienation to be illegal, and in the year 1883 ordered that the plaintiff should be reinstated in the possession of his share. At plaintiff's request, his share was given into the possession of the defendant, who was the plaintiff's brother and khatedar of the entire bhag. In the year 1892 the plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant to recover possession of his share. The defendant contended that the suit was time-barred, the plaintiff not having been in possession since the year 1871. Held, that the suit was not barred, the possession of plaintiff's alienee being the possession of the plaintiff himself, and the defendant not being entitled to tack to the period of his own possession that of the plaintiff's alienee. *MAHAMAD DASU v. estates of Bengal owe their origin to indicate that the Government intended to guarantee to the proprietors the absolute preservation of their estates. By the regulations the Government declared that, as regards the estates that came within the scope of the permanent settlement, it withdrew its sovereign right to vary the assessments; beyond that they did not go; they do not constitute a contractual relationship between the Government and the owners of permanently-settled estates, or any relationship as would debar Government from claiming and exercising against those owners the rights of an ordinary proprietor. Although therefore Government continues to receive the full revenue from the proprietor of a permanently-settled estate for the entire estate, the former is not precluded from claiming title by adverse possession in respect of any portion thereof. When a person is let into possession of a particular property by another claiming it to be his own, the former cannot contend, after the expiration of his tenancy, that the latter (i.e., the person alleging himself to be the owner) cannot acquire an adverse title against him as well as others by efflux of time. *Kally Churn Sahoo v. POSSESSION—*contd.*4. ADVERSE POSSESSION—contd.

from the office by G, who represented the two other branches, but recovered it in 1850. Held, that the presumption arising against T having been a nominee of all the branches of the family, not having been rebutted by any evidence of an assertion and admission of the rights of the other branches, T's occupation of the patilship was adverse to the plaintiff's right, and being adverse at its beginning, it was equally adverse when, after a temporary displacement by G (whom the plaintiff now represents), T recovered it in 1850. An interval of more than twelve years therefore having passed between 1850 and the institution of the present suit in 1873, the claim was barred, and the possession of the office obtained by T's representatives could not be disturbed. *GIRIAPA v. 57. ———— Effect of service tenure—Non-performance of service. Where lands are held as remuneration for services, the fact that no services have been performed does not of itself make the holding adverse. To make the holding adverse, there must be a refusal to perform service or a claim to hold the lands free of service. KOMARGOWDA v. BHIMAJI KESHAV . I. L. R. 23 Bom. 602

58. ———— Possession after redemption by one of several mortgagors—Mortgage—Suit for redemption or recovery of property on payment of a charge—Limitation. The plaintiff sought to recover his father's share in two portions of family property, one of which had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father and the father of the defendant No. 1 jointly; the other had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father jointly with the father of defendant No. 1 and the husband of defendant No. 2. The first was redeemed by the father of defendant No. 1 alone in 1868; the second was redeemed by the defendant No. 1 more than twelve years before the suit. The parties were Mahomedans, and the plaintiff had a brother and three sisters only, one of whom (defendant No. 2) was a party to the suit. Defendant No. 1 contended that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that it was time-barred. Held, that the plaintiff's brothers and sisters ought to have been joined as co-plaintiffs, the defendant No. 1's possession after redemption not being adverse to them. If it was adverse at all, it was adverse to the whole of the plaintiff's branch of the family, so as to bar the right of the group altogether. But that was no reason why the co-owners should not be admitted as co-plaintiffs, and the suit go on upon its merits. BHAUDIN v. ISMAIL . I. L. R. 11 Bom. 425

(usufructuary) from C since 1273 (1866), and as such mortgagee in 1282 (1875) B purchased a share therein from D, who had not been in actual possession since the date of the mortgage. On the 20th January 1885 B brought a suit to recover possession of his purchased share. Held, that the subsequent purchase did not change the character of B from that of a mortgagee to that of an owner, and that his suit was barred by twelve years' limitation. NUNDO LAL ADDY v. JODU NATH HALDAR. I. L. R. 14 Calc. 674

60. — Denial by mortgagee in possession of mortgagor's right to redeem. Denial by a mortgagee in possession of the mortgagor's right to redeem is not sufficient to convert such possession into adverse possession. MUSSAD v. COLLECTOR OF MALABAR. I. L. R. 10 Mad. 189

61. — Possession of one co-sharer when adverse—Limitation—Co-sharer—Mortgage—Mortgage by three co-sharers—Redemption by one of several mortgagors—Right of the other mortgagors to sue for redemption—Period of limitation for such suit. In 1847 the property in dispute was mortgaged by three co-shares, D, A, and R. In 1859 R alone redeemed the property, and mortgaged it again to a third person. In 1882 the heirs of D and A brought a suit to redeem the whole of the property, or their portions of it. The defence to the suit was that it was barred by limitation, being brought more than twelve years after R had redeemed the property, and R's possession subsequently to such redemption having been adverse to the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title:—Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation. When R redeemed the property, he held it, as regards his co-sharers' interests in it, as a lienor, and as such his possession was not adverse to them. It did not contradict, but rather implied and preserved their ultimate proprietary right. In the case of a co-sharer holding after redemption, limitation is computed only from the date when the possession becomes adverse by the assertion of an exclusive title and submission to the right thus set up, in analogy to the provision which bars an excluded sharer generally after the lapse of twelve years from the time when he becomes aware of his exclusion. As long as possession can be referred to a right consistent with the subsistence of an ownership in being at its commencement, so long must the possession be referred to that right, rather than to a right which contradicts the ownership. RAM-CHANDRA YASHVANT SIRPOTDAR v. SADASHIV ABAJI SIRPOTDAR. I. L. R. 11 Bom. 422

62. — Equity of redemption—Mortgage—Limitation. In 1845 the plaintiff's grandfather A mortgaged the house in dispute to D with possession. A died in 1849, leaving him surviving his daughter K (the plaintiff's mother) and a daughter-in-law N, the widow of his predeceased adopted son. In 1856 the mortgagee D brought a suit on his mortgage against N and obtained a decree against her, directing inter alia, a sale of the house in the event of the non-payment of the mortgage-debt. N in consequence sold the house in the same year (1856) to R, and paid off the mortgagee, who thereupon at her instance gave up the house to R. He held possession from 1856 to 1884. In 1881 the defendant P obtained a decree against R for Rs. 2,000. In execution of this decree the house was sold, and P bought it himself and obtained possession on 17th January, 1884. While that suit was pending, the plaintiff T, the grandson of A, brought a suit (No. 247 of 1881) against the son of D (the original mortgagee) and R to redeem the mortgage of 1845 and recover possession. The plaintiff obtained a decree against D's son for redemption, and proceeded to execute the decree. He was obstructed by R's son, who, however, in a suit (No. 205 of 1882) was found to have no right to the house. The present suit was brought in 1884 by the plaintiff to recover the house from the defendant. Held, that the suit was barred. The defendant in 1884 purchased the house from R, who had bought it in 1856 from N. R's possession since that time had been adverse to the plaintiff. There can be adverse possession of the equity of redemption, and N's possession had been adverse up to the sale in 1856. PUTTAPPA v. TIMMAJI. I. L. R. 14 Bom. 176

63. — One of several co-mortgagees obtaining possession of the whole property—Usufructuary mortgage satisfied out of usufruct—Limitation. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage by several co-mortgagors when such mortgage is satisfied out of the usufruct, each co-mortgagor is not entitled to recover possession of more than his share of the mortgaged property. Consequently where in such a case one of several co-mortgagors gets possession of the whole of the mortgaged property, he does not occupy the position of a mortgagee to his co-mortgagors, but his possession is adverse to them. *Fakir Bukhsh v. 64. — Possession of usufructuary mortgagees—Burden of proof. The possession of a usufructuary mortgagee being the possession of all the persons who have the right of redemption, that is, of all the persons entitled to the estate, it is only when after redemption possession is taken by some of the persons so entitled that their possession can become adverse as against the others. In a suit for possession of immoveable property it is for the plaintiff to show by some prima facie evidence that he has a subsisting title not extinguished by the operation of limitation before the defendant can be called upon to substantiate a plea of adverse possession. *Parmanand Misr v. 6. ———— Failure to show possession. In a suit in which the plaintiff claimed confirmation of possession, it appeared on the face of the plaint that, although the suit was in form a suit for confirmation of possession, it was in substance a suit for recovery of possession. It was found that the plaintiff, while he had proved his title, was not in possession. Held, that, under the circumstances, the suit ought not to have been dismissed. AMIR HOSSEIN v. IMAMBANDI BEGUM

7. ———— Plaintiff found to be out of possession. In a suit, in form, for confirmation of possession, it was alleged that the Collector had refused to register the plaintiff's name in respect of the property claimed, but had registered the defendant's name. The plaintiff having been found to be out of possession, the lower Court dismissed the suit. The plaint bore a stamp sufficient to cover a suit for recovery of possession. Held, that, inasmuch as the effect of the refusal of the Collector to register the plaintiff's name under s. 78 of the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876) was to prevent the plaintiff recovering the rent of the estate, and that such refusal was alleged in the plaint, the suit might be taken to be in substance a suit for recovery of possession, and ought not to have been dismissed. *Amir Hossein v. 8. ———— Suit against trespasser—Appointment of a Committee for management of property—Appointment acquiesced in by owner—Committee in management for a long time—Suit by Committee against a trespasser in ejectment—Title. The Parsi Panchayat at Bombay appointed a Committee to manage the property of the Parsi Anjuman at Surat. The Committee managed the property for a very long time—sixty years—with the authority and acquiescence of the Parsi Anjuman. Subsequently the defendant having trespassed on the property, the Committee sued him in ejectment. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs had no right to sue for the recovery of the property as they were neither the owners nor the nominees of the Anjuman. Held, that the plaintiffs being in possession for a long time with the authority and acquiescence of the owners, namely, the Parsi Anjuman at Surat, were entitled to recover possession from a trespasser. *JIVANJI JAMSHEDJI v. by virtue of a sanad (grant) from the zamindar, and from which he had been dispossessed by the defendants, the lower Appellate Court held that the execution of the sanad was not satisfactorily proved, but that it was not a forgery, and that there was the corroborative evidence (such as the dakhilas produced before it) to prove the case of the plaintiff. Held, that, when a claim is based upon a sanad, and the plaintiff fails to prove the execution of the sanad itself, he may prove his claim by other means. In a suit for mere possession, it is unnecessary to state or prove a particular title. RASH BEHARI LAL SINGH v. NABAYI PODDAR

DIGUMBUREE DABEE . 12 W. R. 429

8. ———— Alternative claim—Adverse possession. Suits for possession distinguished from suits for declaration of a particular title. Where a plaintiff seeks to recover possession of property of which he has been dispossessed, and bases his claim on the ground of purchase, and also upon the ground of a twelve years' possessory title, he is entitled to succeed if he proves his possession, even if he fails to prove his purchase. GOSAIN DASS CHUNDER v. 9. ———— Lakhiraj title—Suit for possession on forcible dispossession. In a suit to recover possession on the allegation that the plaintiff, having been in possession, was suddenly and recently ejected, the sole question for decision is the right to possession, apart from any question of the validity or otherwise of the lakhiraj title under which the plaintiff claims. BOODHA MIRDHA v. KHYRUT ALI MIRDHA . 5 W. R. 269

10. ———— Suit for declaration of right—Right to possession—Right of person with good title ousted by person who had none. Plaintiff sued to establish his right to a dharmakartaship and to the hereditary office of pooja stanika in a pagoda. He alleged that he held the office of pooja stanika hereditarily, and that the dharmakartaship was assigned to him by the original dharmakartas by deed (No. I), but that he was afterwards forcibly dispossessed by defendants. Defendants denied plaintiff's hereditary right to the office of pooja stanika, and declared that he was removed from the dharmakartaship for neglecting his duties, and that they were appointed instead by document (No. IV). The District Judge gave judgment in favour of plaintiff. The defendants appealed. An issue was sent to the lower Court whether, assuming exhibit I to be revocable, did the persons who executed exhibit IV constitute the collective body entitled to revoke it. The lower Court found this issue in the negative. Held (by the High Court), that this was not properly a suit for a declaration. The object of the suit and the effect of the declaration would have been to put the plaintiff in possession of that from which he had been ousted; that as to the claim to the dharmakartaship, document I showed that the plaintiff was a mere appointee as agent, and that, as the authority given by it was not revoked by IV, the case was that of one ousted from a possession which he held upon a good title by those who had shown none; that on the principle of such cases as Asher v. Whitlock, L. R. 1 Q. B. 1, the plaintiff had a right to the restoration of that possession. NARAYANASAMI MUDALI v. KUMARASAMI GURUKAL. . . . . 7 Mad. 267

11. . . . . Proof of joint possession. In a suit to recover possession it was proved that plaintiffs had purchased shares in a joint property and had held possession. The lower Appellate Court, thinking they had done so separately without being at the time aware of their ijmal rights, held that it could not decree to them the joint possession sought for. Held, that it matters not what position plaintiffs considered themselves to have occupied originally whilst in possession. If they can establish their right, they are entitled to recover possession, whether that possession were originally joint or separate. RAJBULLUB SHAMMEE v. WARIS MAHOMED

12. . . . . Possession as title—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) Amendment Act (XII of 1891), s. 9—Possession as title against all but true owner—Effect of Specific Relief Act even where suit is brought more than six months after dispossession. Possession is, under the Indian, as under the English, law, good title against all but the true owner. S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act is in no way inconsistent with the position that, as against a wrong-doer, prior possession of the plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, is sufficient title, even if the suit be brought more than six months after the act of dispossession complained of, and that the wrong-doer cannot successfully resist the suit by showing that the title and the right to possession are in a third person. The only effect of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act is that a person who has been dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, and who brings a summary suit within the time prescribed by that section, is entitled to be reinstated, even if the defendant by whom he was dispossessed be the true owner or a person authorized by or claiming under him. But a decree passed in such a suit will not have the force of res judicata on the question of title. Nisa Chand Gaita v. Kanchiram Bagani, *I. L. 13. . . . . Suit for possession based on possessory title of plaintiff's predecessor—Plaintiffs never themselves in possession—Cause of action. Musammam Wazir Jan, the owner of certain zamindari property, died on the 18th of December 1889, leaving no direct heirs. After her death the property was taken possession of by the four nephews of Musammam Wazir Jan's deceased husband. One of these nephews, Bisharat, died on the 7th of August 1890, whereupon the share of which he had been in possession was appropriated by his son Kasim to the exclusion of Kasim's two sisters, Ayesha Begam and Kudrat Begam. While in Kasim's possession the property, or part of it, was sold in execution of a decree against Kasim and purchased by Shi Gopal and others. On the 7th of August 1902, Kasim's sisters sued to recover their shares of the property as heirs of Bisharat. Held, by KNOX J. (AIKMAN, J. dissentiente), that inasmuch as the plaintiffs had never at any time been in possession of the property claimed by them, their suit would not lie. Asher v. Whitlock, *L. R. 1 Q. 15. ———— Onus probandi—Necessity to prove title against party in possession. In a suit in which the plaintiff claimed alluvial land in the possession of the Government as being his by right of accretion to his own estate, though the churs had re-formed on the original sites of lands belonging to other persons:—Held, that the case could not be decided on the principle that, inasmuch as those other parties were not before the Court, the plaintiff had the better title as between himself and Government. The land was in the possession of Government, and the plaintiff could not succeed by establishing a better title. COLLECTOR OF DACCA v. KALEE CHURN PODDAR . . . 21 W. R. 446

16. ———— Necessity to prove title—Wife suing by permission of husband. In a suit to recover property in the enjoyment and possession of defendant, a female plaintiff can only succeed on the strength of her own right, not merely because it is the property of her husband, who does not object to her recovering it. There is no necessary presumption that property in the possession of a respectable female's husband, brother and son, respectively, is possession on her behalf, and not on theirs. *KAFATOULLAH v. The only possession that a zamindar can obtain after a decree for resumption is a constructive one derived from the receipt of rent from the tenant. MUGNEE RAM CHOWDHRY v. GONESH DUTT SINGH . . . 23. ———— Suit by mortgagee for possession—Covenant for possession—Suit for possession after expiration of term of mortgage. A mortgagor covenanted to give the mortgagee possession of the mortgaged property, but did not do so, and the mortgagee consequently sued him for possession, but not until the term of the mortgage had expired. In December 1872 R mortgaged the land to V and put him into possession. V had no notice of the prior pledge to P. In 1876 P, in execution of his Small Cause Court decree, attached and sold the right, title, and interest of R in the land, became the purchaser at the Court sale, and was put into possession by an order of the Court executing the decree. V's claim under s. 269 of Act VIII of 1859 was rejected. Held, in a suit by V against P, that V was entitled to recover the lands in dispute. Per TURNER, C.J.—Quære: Whether the decision in *Ramu Naikan v. 25. — Suit between purchasers under mortgage-decrees—Priority of mortgage—Rival mortgage decree-holders—Priority of possession. In a suit for possession between two purchasers, who had bought the same property at two several auction-sales under decrees obtained on two several mortgage-bonds:—Held, that no question could arise as to which mortgage was prior in point of time, but that the real question to be decided was which of the parties could prove a prior title to possession. 26. — Several mortgages of the same property—Decrees on the mortgage-bonds—Priority of purchase—Priority of possession. A, on the 11th March 1868, took a mortgage-bond of certain property, and obtained a money-decree on the bond on the 23rd January 1869. Under this decree, the mortgagor's interest was put up for sale and purchased by A on the 29th April 1870. B, on the 3rd November 1868, took a mortgage-bond on the same property, and obtained a decree thereon on the 31st May 1869. Under this decree, the mortgagor's interest was sold, and purchased by B on the 22nd April 1870. B took possession of the property on the 18th May 1872. In a suit by A for recovery of possession:—Held, that B was entitled to retain possession as against A, although his own interest might be merely that of a trustee for the mortgagor, and might be subject to A's mortgage-lien if he took proper proceedings to enforce it. One of the zamindaris was sold and purchased by B, but the bil fisheries still continued with the remaining zamindari held by A. After the sale certain lands reclaimed from the bil were for some years held by B as part of his purchased zamindari. A instituted a summary suit under Act IV of 1840, and was by an order of the Magistrate put in possession of these lands. B brought a regular suit against A to recover the lands and set aside his order. Held (reversing the decisions of the Courts below), that it was necessary for B to show a better title to the land than A could produce. It was not enough for him to prove possession anterior to the Magistrate's order under Act IV of 1840. The presumption was that the land of the bil belonged to A, who had admittedly owned both estates before, and had retained the fisheries of the bil after the auction sale. B ought to have shown when and how, if at all, the right to the fisheries and the right to the soil were severed. The suit was dismissed, defendants having failed in that suit to prove their title. Defendants subsequently dispossessed the plaintiff in 1890; and plaintiff instituted the present suit in 1896 but could not prove his title. Held, that the effect of the decree in the previous suit was to declare, as against the present defendants, that plaintiff's possession was lawful; and, such being the case, and the defendants being wrong-doers and having no title, the plaintiff in the present suit, on the basis of the decree in the previous suit and his previous lawful possession, is entitled to recover possession if the lands are the same. registered document, dated 11th November, 1893, defendant leased certain villages to plaintiff for a term of seven years and eight months. On 5th December, 1893, plaintiff applied to be put into possession of the villages, but never obtained possession. On 11th November, 1899, plaintiff brought this suit for possession, and in the alternative for the damages which he had sustained by the failure on the part of defendant to put him into possession. On the plea of limitation being set up:—Held, that the claim for damages was not barred, it being governed by Art. 116 of Sch. II to the Limitation Act. Both in the case of a sale and of a lease, the registered instrument by which such sale or lease is effected not only operates as a grant, but, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, is also construed and operates as an executory contract to deliver to the vendee or lessee such possession of the property as its nature permits; and the breach of such an obligation is a breach of a contract in writing registered, within the meaning of the article referred to. It was also contended by the defendant that, inasmuch as the raiyats were in actual occupation of the villages which formed the subject matter of the lease, the defendant had, in fact, by the mere execution and delivery of the lease, given plaintiff such possession as the subject-matter of the lease permitted, and that plaintiff could have collected the rents without any further act on the part of the defendant. Held, that possession had not been given. ZAMINDAR OF VIZIANAGRAM v. The Court declined to decide this question, and passed a decree for the sale of the property, which, being sold, was purchased by the plaintiff, who, not being able to obtain possession, brought the present suit for recovery of possession. Held, that the objection of the landlord defendants that the holding was not transferable could be gone into in the present suit, and that s. 244, Civil Procedure Code, was no bar to the determination of the question, as it was made by the defendants in the suit. *Bhiram Ali Sheikh v. 7. EFFECT OF POSSESSION.

1. ——— Nature of interest in immovable property acquired by virtue of mere possession. A person in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is heritable and good against all the world except the true owner—an interest which, unless and until the true owner interferes, is capable of being disposed of by deed or will, or by execution sale, just in the same way as it could be dealt with if the title were unimpeachable. Asher v. Whitlock, L. R. 1 Q. B. 1; Sunder v. Parbati, I. L. R. 12 All. 51; and Brindaban Chunder Rao v. Tara Chand Banerjee, 20 W. R. 114, referred to. GOBIND PRASAD v. MOHAN LAL (1901) . . . I. L. R. 24 All. 157

2. ——— Title—Nature of merely possessory title. A person whose title to immovable property rests upon mere possession is competent to deal with such property as if he were the owner, and his acts will be good as against all persons other than the true owner. If such a possessor executes a registered deed of gift of the property, he is subject to the rule that no one can derogate from his own grant. Govind Prasad v. Mohan Lal, I. L. R. 24 All. 157, followed. Phul Chund v. Lakkhu, I. L. R. 25 All. 358, referred to. PAHLWAN SINGH v. RAM BHAROSE (1905) I. L. R. 27 All. 169

8. Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 145—Tangible immovable property.

A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immovable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the operation of that section cannot be limited by any rule which would depend upon the area of the property in dispute. Where, in such a dispute which related to two pergunnahs comprising more than three hundred distinct villages, it was admitted by the petitioner that the opposite party had been in possession by receipt of rent from the tenants up to a period some three months anterior to the institution of the proceeding, but she alleged that she had succeeded in inducing the tenants to attorn to her by payment of rent to the officers appointed by her since such period; and where the Deputy Commissioner, after recording a certain amount of evidence, refused to examine any more witnesses on the ground that the enquiry would extend to an inordinate length and be extremely expensive, and passed an order under the section:—Held, that, even though it might be established that the Deputy Commissioner's action in excluding evidence was illegal, it did not follow, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that the High Court would be justified in exercising its revisional powers. Held, further, that a payment of rent for a short time to the petitioner, even if proved, would not amount to dispossession of the opposite party. *Sarbananda Basu Mozumdar v. 12. Dispute concerning ferry including land and water over which it plies—Right of ferry—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145. The right to a ferry, i.e., the right to carry passengers to and fro, cannot be treated apart from the possession of the lands used on either side of the stream for the purpose of landing them. It is a proper case to be dealt with under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) where the subject-matter of dispute is a ferry, including the land and water upon which the right of ferry is exercised. HURBULLABH NARAIN SINGH v. Disputes regarding ferries come within the scope of s. 147. S. 182 relates only to cases of offences, that is acts which are punishable by law, and a case under s. 145 is not a case relating to an offence. HARBULLABH NARAIN SINGH v. BAJRANG DASS . 3 C. W. 16. ———— Dispute about right to perform service in a public temple—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145. A dispute relating to the right of performing religious service in a public temple when it is likely to cause a breach of the public peace falls under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898). Muhammad Musaliar v. Kunji Chek Musaliar, I. L. R. 11 Mad. 323, referred to. A dispute arose between certain classes of priests attached to a Hindu temple about the right of performing a certain religious service. On the complaint of one of the parties, the Magistrate of the district purporting to act under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), passed an ex parte order prohibiting the other party from taking any part in the said service although both parties had been previously declared by the Civil Court to be entitled to officiate at the service. Held, that the order was illegal and opposed to the provisions of s. 145 of the Code. The High Court ordinarily has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order under Ch. XII of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), which is not a proceeding within the meaning of s. 435 of the Code; but when the Magistrate exceeds his jurisdiction under s. 144 or s. 145, the High Court has power to interfere under its revisional jurisdiction (s. 439). In re PANDURANG GOVIND . . . . . I. 109 plots, but having taken evidence, dealt in his order with twelve only, directing that the raiyats of village B should be kept in possession. Held, that, it appearing that all the 109 plots were covered by the same state of circumstances, the Magistrate had exercised a sound discretion in acting as he did. *AZIM MOLLA v. 19. ———— Dispute as to property of which each of two persons claimed the whole without allegation of joint possession—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 530. Where each of two parties claimed the same share of certain property as a whole estate, neither alleging that the other was joint with him in any way, and the Magistrate, without reference to the right of possession, went into the question of who was in possession and maintained the possession of the party found in possession, the High Court held that the case fell under Act X of 1872, s. 530, and saw no necessity to interfere with the decision. *BYJNATH SAHOO v. S. 145 of the Code contemplates a dispute between two parties each of which asserts the right to hold actual possession of property as against the other and not a dispute between a party claiming to hold joint possession and another contesting such right. *TARIYAN BIBEE v. On appeal, the injunction was dissolved on the ground that the defendant was in possession. Subsequent to this order, the District Magistrate, on the complaint of the plaintiff against the defendant, passed an order under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, declaring that K and V were in possession, and forbidding all disturbance of their possession until the decision of a Civil Court. Held, that, K and V not being parties to the proceedings, the order was illegal. Held, also, that, if a breach of the peace appeared likely to occur, the proper course was for the Magistrate to take security from the party from whom a breach of the peace was apprehended, but that it was not illegal for the Magistrate to proceed under s. 145 or s. 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. *SUBBA v. ascertain land in dispute—Order passed in respect of lands in excess of those referred to in the proceedings, if proper. Under s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate has power to intervene and pass a temporary order in regard to the possession of the land in dispute, only until one or other of the parties applies for or obtains a determination of his rights in a Civil Court. If he still considers necessary that steps should be taken to preserve the peace, it is open to him to take proceedings under provisions of law other than s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure. He has no jurisdiction to proceed under s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure. When in a proceeding under s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, a question is raised as to the identity of the land in dispute, the Magistrate is bound, before going further, to ascertain and identify the lands, so that neither party may be in doubt as to the specific land in respect of which proceedings are taken. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to decide a dispute as to the lands in excess of those referred to in his proceedings. AMRITESHWARI DEBI v. DARPA NARAIN DAS (1903) . . . . . 7 C. W. N. 558

If that component part is distinct and separable from the rest, it cannot rightly be held that, because a magistrate cannot find possession of one of the component parts of the subject-matter in dispute with either party, he is bound to attach the whole, although that component part is distinct and separable from the rest. If the subject-matter in dispute is indivisible and must be dealt with as a whole, it must be dealt with in such a way as to make, in regard to it, one order under either s. 145 or s. 146 of the Code, as the circumstances may require.

Under the Code of 1872, an explanation was added that the Magistrate might be satisfied as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace on a report or other information, but as to the fact of possession on evidence. The following, however, was a later holding under the Code of 1872 with regard to a police report.

12. Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 530—Record of grounds—Police report, incorporation of—Evidence of possession—Evidence of title. In proceedings under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate recorded the following words: "Whereas from the police report a breach of the peace is probable" and found that certain persons were in possession:—Held, that, although the record of grounds was unsatisfactory, as the initial proceeding did not contain within itself all which the law requires to be recorded, viz., in the first place, that the Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists, and in the second place, the ground upon which he is so satisfied, yet that, as the police report from which the grounds for apprehending a breach of the peace appeared was incorporated by reference, the final order was not defective. In the matter of the petition of KALI KRISTO THAKUR v. GOLAM ALI CHOWDHRY

And under the Code of 1882, the Magistrate is now to be "satisfied on a police report or other information."

13. *Police report setting out probability of breach of peace. Where a Magistrate, in consequence of the institution of various cases relating to breaches of the peace between the partizans of two rival zamindars, had directed the police to enquire and report whether there were sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and having received a report which both suggested the necessity for such proceedings and set forth substantial reasons in support of the suggestion, made such report the foundation for the proceedings which he instituted, it was contended among other things, that the Magistrate had not complied with the provisions of the Code in omitting to state the grounds of his being so satisfied of the imminence of a breach of the peace. Held, that, inasmuch as the police report contained abundant evidence of the likelihood of a breach of the peace, it was sufficient, for the purpose of notice to the parties, for the Magistrate to cite it as the ground of his proceeding on which he was satisfied that a dispute within the terms of s. 145 existed, and that it would be open to the parties during the proceedings, if they disputed the necessity for them, to show before the Magistrate that no such dispute existed, or, if so advised, to move the Court of revision to set aside the proceedings, on the ground that the Magistrate had proceeded on grounds which were not reasonable or which could not be held to be sufficient to satisfy him that such a dispute existed. *DHANPUT SINGH v. ing land. Before taking action, the Magistrate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information on this point, and he is also bound to make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and this must be served on the parties to the dispute; for it is the intention of the law, not only that Magistrate should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding. A Sessions Judge is not competent to order a Magistrate to take action under s. 145. He should rather draw his attention to the nature of the dispute in the trial before him, so that the Magistrate may exercise his own discretion as to the necessity of proceedings. Proceedings so initiated, when there is nothing in the police report or elsewhere to justify them, would be void, and s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code would have no application. *Gour Mohan Majee v. The circumstances under which the jurisdiction springs up are circumstances which give rise to an apprehension of a breach of the peace, and, if there is no apprehension of a breach of the peace, there is no jurisdiction to make the order. The police report on which the Magistrate founds the initiatory order should contain a statement of facts from which he may be satisfied of the existence of a likelihood of a breach of the peace. 1. ——— Parties claiming to be in possession of land, the subject of dispute, right of, to appear in proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 145. Before taking action under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace, and he is also bound to make an order in writing, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and this must be served on the parties to the dispute; for it is the intention of the law, not only that Magistrates should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding. Parties who, though not actually involved in the dispute, claim to be in possession of lands which are the subject of proceedings under s. 145, should not be shut out from giving evidence in support of their claims. To do so would undoubtedly occasion very serious prejudice and interference with any possession which they might be able to establish. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GOBIND CHUNDRA DAS

2. ——— Parties concerned in proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 145. The words "concerned in the dispute," as used in s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), are not limited to the parties actually concerned in the dispute, but include parties concerned in the subject-matter of the dispute, who would be affected by the Magistrate's order maintaining the possession of any third party in their absence. *GANESH JALIA v. In a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure recorded on the 27th April 1893, A and B were respectively made first and second parties, and were ordered to put in statements of their claims to the land in dispute, which they accordingly did. B died on 24th May 1893. In his statement filed on the 31st May, A disclaimed any interest in the land, but stated that his mother, D K (who had been a party concerned in the dispute which led to the original proceeding), was the owner and in possession of it. On 1st June B S applied to be substituted as a party in place of his father B. D K and B S were made parties without any fresh proceeding under s. 145 of the Code. The case was heard on 27th June and 7th July, and on 17th July the Magistrate found as regards the possession in favour of D K. Held, by PETHERAM, C.J., and TREVELYAN, J. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting), that since the possession to be enquired into was the possession at the time of the initiation of the proceedings, the words "parties concerned in the dispute" meant parties concerned at that time: there was no power in such a proceeding to introduce parties who were not concerned in the original dispute. No order could therefore be made against B S, and the proceedings were bad as against him. Per RAMPINI, J.—The preliminary proceeding under s. 145 of the Code may, and in many cases must, partake of the character of a general citation to all the parties concerned in the dispute to appear, and it is not necessary for the Magistrate to confine his final order as to possession to the parties whom he may have named in the preliminary proceeding. The Magistrate had power to substitute the name of B S for that of his father without commencing the proceedings de novo. The alteration in s. 145 of Act X of 1882, the present Criminal Procedure Code, of the language of s. 530 of the old Code, Act X of 1872, implies, that the Magistrate is to decide on the possession not at the time of the initiation of the proceedings, but at the time of recording the evidence. If there was any error in the proceedings, it was one cured by s. 537 of the Code. BECHU SHEIKH v. DEB KUMARI DAS

5. ——— Adding parties—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Jurisdiction—Breach of the peace—Joint trial of several cases, whether legal. A Magistrate must deal with a case under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, as it is originally instituted. If he finds that he cannot do so in respect to one side because they are not parties to the dispute or because it has been shown that no breach of the peace is likely to occur from any action of theirs, he should put an end to the case. A Magistrate is not competent to add parties after the institution of proceedings. Where a Magistrate tried together three cases under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, by consent of parties:—Held, that the parties in all the cases not being the same, the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was bad in law. The Magistrate has no power to add parties during the course of the proceeding unless in the initial proceeding he is satisfied that they are concerned in the dispute. Addition of parties during proceedings. The words in s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure “parties concerned” in a dispute do not necessarily mean only the parties who are disputing, but include also persons who are interested in or claiming a right to the property in dispute. It is the duty of the Magistrate on the materials before him to ascertain, so far as he can, who are the persons interested in or claiming a right to the property in dispute and to give notice to them all, so that the whole matter, so far as his Court is concerned, may be disposed of in one proceeding. Ram Chandra Das v. Monohur Roy, I. L. R. 21 Calc. 29, and Protap Narain Singh v. Rajendra Narain Singh, I. L. R. 24 Calc. 55, followed. Where there was a dispute as to the ownership of lands between certain zamindars and their tenants on the one side and other zamindars and their tenants on the other, and the real matter for determination was not merely which of the two parties of zamindars were entitled to collect the rents of the lands, but also which set of rival tenants was entitled to hold actual possession of the lands, and in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the zamindars only were made parties and not the tenants. Held per (AMEER ALI and STANLEY, JJ.), that the tenants were necessary parties to the proceeding, and the omission to make them parties went to the root of the case and was an illegality affecting jurisdiction which would justify the High Court in setting aside the order. PRINSEP, J.—The omission to join the tenants could not vitiate an order as between the zamindars on an objection that it was without jurisdiction, and that no question of jurisdiction arose in the matter. The High Court’s powers are under the Charter Act, and these could be exercised only in respect of jurisdiction. LALDHARI SINGH v. SUKDEO NARAIN SINGH. I. L. R. 27 Calc. 892 4 C. W. N. 613 proceeding—New proceeding with new parties added, whether it can be treated as continuation of previous proceeding—Jurisdiction—Procedure. In a proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Magistrate to find out in the first instance which parties are concerned in the dispute that has arisen, and to serve his order upon such parties; and, when the matter comes before him for trial, he should determine which of such parties, namely, the parties mentioned in the first paragraph of s. 145 of the Code, is in actual possession. A Magistrate is entitled to allow a third party to come in in the course of the proceeding only for the purpose of showing that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace really existed or exists. Quære: Whether such third party should be made a party to the proceeding. A Magistrate has not the power, after recording the proceeding as he is required to do under the first paragraph of the section, to add, in the course of the investigation, any new party as concerned in the dispute. Protap Narayan Singh v. Rajendra Narayan Singh, 1 C. W. N. 3; Janoki Nath Roy v. The Queen-Empress, 3 C. W. N. 329; Laldhari Singh v. Sukhdeo Narain Singh, 4 C. W. N. 613, followed. A Magistrate cannot treat a subsequent proceeding as a continuation of an earlier one, and he cannot refer back to the possession held by one or other of the parties upon the date of the earlier proceeding in determining which of them should be declared to be in possession on the date of the subsequent proceeding. *BENI SINGH v. The words “parties concerned in such dispute” are intended to indicate all persons claiming to be in possession at the time of the initial orders under sub-s. (1), s. 145, of the Code. A claim merely to a right to possession, as distinguished from a claim to be in possession, would be outside the scope of the inquiry. Where there has been an addition of a party after the initiation of the proceedings, there is no necessity for fresh proceedings, if the party added was concerned originally in the dispute which is the foundation of the proceedings. Up to the time the enquiry begins, parties may be added. If they are added after, it is an irregularity, but it is not necessary to initiate fresh proceedings, although evidence previously taken ought, if the parties added require it, to be again taken in their presence. Proceedings under s. 145 are not without jurisdiction because some person claiming possession in some way of the lands or a portion of the lands in dispute has not been made a party, he not being one of the parties in the dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, so far as appeared to the Magistrate; such person not having appeared and raised any objection. the property in dispute was forest land, the right to possession of which was exercised by cutting and removing timber from time to time, the Magistrate found that the men of the first party had been driven away by those of the second, and had been unable to enter the forest and remove the timber alleged to have been cut by them; that this happened before the time of the initial proceedings, and continued to the date of the hearing; and that the men of the second party had been able to bring out of the forest the timber which had been cut. Upon these findings he came to the conclusion that the possession of the second party had been established, and made an order under the section in their favour. Held, that, having regard to the nature of the property in dispute, these facts could not constitute legal possession of the second party at the time the proceedings were instituted. Held, further, that in like cases, having regard to the nature of the property in dispute, and the mode in which possession may be exercised over it, in order to find which party was in possession when the proceedings were instituted, it is necessary to inquire which party was in undisturbed possession of the land in dispute by felling timber and removing the same without objection on the occasion immediately preceding the one on which the dispute arose; and whichever party be found to have been in possession on that occasion should be presumed to have possession at the time when the proceedings were commenced. JAGAT KISHORE ACHARJYA CHOWDHURI v. It is impossible to lay down any hard-and-first rule which may be applicable to all cases as to the exact point of time to which an inquiry under s. 145 must be directed, and the time at which possession must be found in one party or the other must be governed by the facts of each particular case. To hold that the Magistrate is precluded from inquiring into anything before the date when he actually commenced his own proceedings might in some cases lead to a person who has been acting in an unwarrantable manner misusing the process of the law to enable him to carry out a high-handed and improper scheme, which could never have been the intention of the Legislature. In a proceeding under s. 145 regarding a dispute between two parties concerning certain collieries, it appeared that the first party were certainly in possession of the buildings which contained the office where the business of the collieries was transacted, and where all the cash books and papers of the business were kept, and that the second party had during a period of about fourteen days prior to the commencement of the proceedings succeeded in obtaining possession of the pits, wharves, tramways, etc., of the colliery by what the Court considered to be a high-handed and improper scheme, and acting in an unwarrantable manner. The Magistrate, considering himself bound to find who was in actual possession at the date of the commencement of the proceedings by himself, passed an order in favour of the second party. Held, that such order was bad, and that, as the second party was undoubtedly not in possession of the whole of the property in dispute, and the effect of it was to place them in possession of the portion that was in the possession of the first party, the proper order to make under such circumstances was one under s. 146, attaching the property. KATRAS JHERRIA COAL CO. v. In a dispute between the wife of a lunatic and the manager of his estate with regard to the possession of certain property, the Magistrate attached the property, under s. 531 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that he was unable to satisfy himself as to who was in possession. It had been proved before him that the wife was in actual possession, but there was a doubt as to whether she was not in possession merely as the agent of her husband. Held, that s. 530 has only to do with actual possession, and that the Magistrate should have decided that the wife was in possession. In the matter of JUGGODESHARY CHOWDHRAIN

The 2nd party not being the debtors, the sale certificate, which originally contained their names, was subsequently amended by those names being struck off. The Magistrate found that the 2nd party now claimed an undivided share, and passed an order under s. 146, Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, that, if the claim of the 2nd party was to an undivided share, the order of the Magistrate was wrong inasmuch as s. 145 contemplates a dispute between two parties, each of whom asserts the right to hold actual possession of the property as against the other, and not a dispute between parties claiming to hold joint possession and neither contesting such right. *Tarujan Bibee v. The duty of a Criminal Court, in a case under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, where there is a decree of a Civil Court for possession in respect of the disputed land, is to find which party held such Civil Court decree, and then to maintain that party in possession; it is not necessary that such decree should be a decree for possession as between the parties to the proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. *Daulat Koer v. Such proceedings do not constitute a "criminal case," within the meaning of s. 526 of the Code. A criminal case means a case arising out of, and dealing with, some crime already committed. It does not include proceedings taken for the prevention of crime. Under s. 145 of the Code, a Magistrate is not at liberty to go into the merits of the claims, of any of the parties to the dispute, to a right to possess the subject thereof. He can decide only the fact of possession at the date of the order requiring the parties to put in their statements. The parties cannot be called upon to furnish a statement of their rights, nor can the Magistrate take, as the basis of any action he may finally decide upon, any conclusion at which he may arrive, or at which he may have arrived, as to the respective titles of the parties. In re PANDURANG GOVIND PUJARI (1900) . Upon this, a third party represented that he, as landlord, had taken possession of the land on the death of the person to whom it had been leased. One of the parties then sued the other for damages. The Civil Court found that the crops belonged to the plaintiff, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the cutting was by the Magistrate's order and there was no cause of action against the defendant. Upon this finding, the Magistrate ordered the deposit to be made over to the plaintiff. Held, that, as in passing this order the Magistrate was not exercising any judicial power, no question of his jurisdiction arose, and the High Court could not interfere. *ANNADA PERSAD PAL v. S. 530 (j) refers to a case where a Magistrate is not competent, by virtue of the position he holds or powers vested in him, to try a case of the character referred to in s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. S. 148, Criminal Procedure Code, does not necessarily imply that the Magistrate, before whom the case is, may not himself hold the local inquiry provided for in the section. 14. ———— Reasonable likelihood of a breach of the peace—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 147—Police report. The lessee of certain grass land in a village disputed the right of the villagers to graze their cattle on his land during the rainy season. On 26th August 1886 he prosecuted twenty-one villagers before the second class Magistrate for having unlawfully brought their cattle on his land, and committed mischief on the 5th September 1886, and pending this prosecution, the villagers assembled on the land in question and there was a riot. The offenders were convicted and punished. On appeal, the Sub-divisional Magistrate, on the 11th October 1886, upheld the conviction. On the same day, finding from the police report that there existed a dispute between the lessee and the villagers as to the right of the latter to graze cattle on the grass land, and that the dispute was likely to lead to a breach of the peace, the Sub-divisional Magistrate thought it necessary to hold an inquiry into the matter, under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). He, however, postponed the inquiry until the decision of the second class Magistrate in the mischief case. In that case the Magistrate found that the villagers had no right to graze cattle on the land in question, and that the lessee was in exclusive possession of it. He therefore held that the villagers had unlawfully entered upon the land; but as the damage done was inappreciable, he acquitted the accused on the 19th October 1886. The Sub-divisional Magistrate, being of opinion that after this decision a breach of the peace was probable, held the enquiry under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He found that the villagers had the right of grazing cattle on the land in question during the autumn, and that they had exercised this right in the last preceding season. He therefore made an order allowing the right of grazing to the villagers. On application by the lessee to the High Court under s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code :—Held, that the order was illegal. Though the police report afforded some justification for entering upon an inquiry under s. 147, still after the rights of the parties had been judicially pronounced upon by the second class Magistrate in the sense that the villagers had no right of grazing cattle on the land in question, there was no reasonable ground for apprehending any further violence, and therefore no necessity for holding the inquiry under s. 147. In re BALKRISHNA AMRIT PRADHAN

3. ————— Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 522, 523, 524—Order to restore possession of immoveable property. An order made under s. 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), restoring possession of immoveable property to a person who has been dispossessed of it by criminal force, is an independent order and may be made subsequently to the date of the conviction of the offender. It need not be made at the same time as the conviction. The case contemplated by s. 522 is that of a person in possession (the complainant) being dispossessed by force by another person (the accused), and the latter being in possession at the date of conviction. In such a case the section gives the Magistrate power to order possession to be restored to the complainant. In the case of a proper order, third persons could not be affected; if they are, the order is not thereby necessarily invalid. Cl. 2 of the section gives them a remedy by civil suit. On 27th September 1897 complainant charged one R with criminal trespass under s. 447 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He alleged that in the previous July R had entered into possession of the land and sowed rice upon it, and that, when in the month of September 1897 he (the complainant) went to the field, R had turned him out by force and refused to vacate the land. On the 17th November 1897 the case was heard by the Third Class Magistrate, who convicted R of the offence charged. On the following day (18th November 1897) the complainant applied to the Magistrate under s. 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to be restored to possession of the land and of the standing crops. The Magistrate ordered possession of the land to be restored to the complainant, but attached the crops under Ch. XLIII of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thereupon one V intervened, and claimed the crops as having been sown by himself. His claim was disallowed, and the crops were ordered to be sold and the proceeds credited to Government under ss. 523 and 524 of the Code. Held, that the order made by the Magistrate under s. 522 restoring possession of the land to the complainant was bad, because it did not appear that the offence of which the accused was convicted was attended with criminal force, and that the dispossession was due to the use of such force. The illegal entry complained of had taken place in July 1897. The accused then took possession, and in September, being then still in possession, forcibly resisted the complainant when he attempted to enter upon the land. The complainant, however, did not charge the accused with this assault, but with the trespass which had taken place in July. It is only when the actual use of criminal force leads to dispossession that an order under s. 522 can be made. Held, also, that the order passed under ss. 523 and 524 with reference to the crops were illegal. The crops were not property in respect of which the offence was committed, nor were they used in the commission of the offence. They were not such property as is referred to in s. 517, 523, or 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held, further, that the Third Class Magistrate as such had no authority to make an order under s. 524. *NARAYAN GOVIND v. Sub-s. (2) of s. 522 provides that any right or interest which a third party may have in the property cannot be affected; and such third party, in case of eviction under an order under s. 522, must seek his remedy in the Civil Court. *Narayan Govind v. An order was subsequently made, which purported to be under s. 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, directing the accused to restore possession of the land. On a revision petition being preferred against this order:—Held, that, as there was no finding that criminal force had in fact been used, or that complainant had been dispossessed of the land by it, and as criminal force was not an ingredient of the offence for which the accused had been convicted, the order was made without jurisdiction. BATAKALA POTTIAVADU (1902)

Where, however, the decision under s. 145 was passed on the 19th December 1893, and the application for costs was made on the 21st December, but owing to delay arising from the action of the objectors the order for costs was not made until the 16th June 1894, but then by the same Magistrate who passed the order under s. 145:—Held, that the order was not void for want of jurisdiction, and there being no suggestion that it was unjust or improper on the merits, the Court declined to interfere with it in the exercise of their discretionary power of revision under s. 439. BINODA SUNDARI CHOWDHURANI v. Where, however, a suit is brought upon a bond executed to secure a former debt, it must be shown by the person alleging it that such debt was barred. HUBLAL SUGU v. RAM GOTI DEY ROY . . . . . 11 C. L. R. 58

7. ————— Mooktearnama—Authority of agent—Power to make gift. A mooktearnama merely gave the mooktear power to grant ticca ijara leases and, when advisable, to sell, mortgage, and make gift of the whole or portion of the property of the principal. Held, that the mooktear had no power to create a permanent tenure. The power of making a gift given by the mooktearnama authorized the mooktear formally to execute a deed of gift only when the disposing power had been exercised by the principal. TYEBUNNESSA v. KANIZ FATIMA . . . . . 13 C. L. R. 247

8. ————— Power to dispose of property—Authority to pledge. A power-of-attorney authorized the holder "to dispose" of certain property in any way he thought fit. Held, that the holder of such power had no authority to mortgage the property. A power-of-attorney must be construed strictly. MALUKCHAND BIN GYANMAL v. SHAN MOGHAN VARDRAJ I. L. R. 14 Bom. 590

9. ————— Power to "sell, endorse, and assign" negotiable securities. The payee of promissory notes of the East India Company, by a power-of-attorney, authorized his agents at Calcutta to "sell, endorse, and assign" the notes. These notes were transferable by endorsement payable to bearer. The agents, in their character of private bankers, borrowed money of the bank of Bengal, offering, as security, these promissory notes. The Bank made the advance, and the agents endorsed the notes, such endorsement purporting to be as attorney for their principal, and deposited them with the Bank, by way of collateral security for their personal liability, at the same time authorising the Bank, in default of payment, to sell the notes in reimbursement of the advances. The agents afterwards became insolvent, and default having been made in payment, the Bank sold the notes and realized the amount of their loan. Held, that the endorsement of the notes by the agents of the payee to the Bank was within the scope of the authority given to them by the power-of-attorney, and that the payee could not recover in detinue against the Bank. The rule laid down in the case of Gill v. Cubitt, 3 B. & C. 466, and Down v. Halling, 4 B. & C. 330, that the negligence of a party taking a negotiable instrument fixes him with the defective title of the party passing it, observed upon, and those cases declared to be no longer law. BANK OF BENGLA v. 11. — Principal and agent—“Purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer”—Meaning of “Power to sell.” N & Co. having a joint and several power-of-attorney from the plaintiff, authorising them “to purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer for the plaintiff, and in the plaintiff's name and on the plaintiff's behalf,” all shares standing in his name in the books of any public company or society, entered into a contract embodied in bought and sold notes, agreeing to sell by order and on account of N & Co. to the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares, and agreeing to buy, by order and for account of N & Co., from the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares in three months' time at an advanced rate; the bought and sold notes bearing the same date and being one transaction. The transfer deeds were signed by a partner in the firm of N & Co. as attorney for the plaintiff; and N & Co. received the purchase-money of the shares. Previous to the time fixed for the sale of twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares by the defendant to N & Co., the latter became insolvent. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the shares from the defendant. Held, by GARTH, C.J., that the transaction between N & Co. and the defendant was not justified by the power-of-attorney, the contract not having been entered into “for and on behalf and in the name of the plaintiff” within the meaning of the power; and that the transaction was either an actual loan or a transaction in the nature of a loan for the purpose of raising money. Per WILSON, J., that the defendant took no title to the shares for two reasons, viz.: (i) because a power to sell is only a power to sell in the ordinary course of business, i.e., for a money price; (ii) because it was the duty of the defendant, seeing that the shares were sold to him under a power, to see that he paid the price to the plaintiff by his attorney. JUMNA DOSS v. ECKFORD

12. — Meaning of the word “negotiate” with reference to Government securities. W gave to A and B a power-of-attorney authorizing them jointly and severally to “negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer,” amongst other things, certain Government securities standing in his name. B pledged the securities for an advance of Rs19,000, and at the same time executed a promissory note for the amount of the loan, a promissory note being signed “B, as attorney for W.” In a suit by W to recover the Government security held, in the Court below, that the power-of-attorney was sufficiently wide to cover the transaction; that the transaction was a fraud on the part of B, but that the transferee (the defendant) had no knowledge of the fraud, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. Held, on appeal, per GARTH, J.—(i) That the words of the power were to be read disjunctively, and the powers conveyed by the words were to be treated as joint and several; (ii) that even supposing the word “negotiable” to be applicable to transactions with Government securities (which was doubtful), and that such Government securities stood in the same position as ordinary commercial notes, the word “negotiate” did not authorize B to do more than put the Government securities in the market, or to put them in circulation in the ordinary way in which such a transaction takes place in the market, and if necessary to endorse them in the name of W; (iii) that the loan, which was the principal transaction, being irrecoverable from W, because unauthorized, the defendant could not return the Government securities, which were deposited as security for the loan, he not having taken the precaution to ascertain whether B had authority to enter into that transaction. Per GARTH, C.J.—That although, on the authority of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 5 Moo. I. A. 27, a power to negotiate Government securities would authorize the negotiation of Government securities by way of pledge, yet W was entitled to a decree on the ground that A and B had no power, under the power-of-attorney, to borrow money in the name of W; and that therefore the defendant was not entitled to retain the security given for the advance (viz., the Government promissory note). WATSON v. JONMENJOY COONDOD

On appeal to the Privy Council:—Held, that, with regard to the general objects of the power, B had under it no authority to pledge, and that the lender of the money acquired no title to the note as against W. The power-of-attorney was not in the same form as that in the Bank of Bengal v. Macleod, 5 Moo. I. A. 1, and Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 5 Moo. I. A. 27, not containing, in express words, power to endorse. Had it done so, the question would have been whether there was anything to prevent it from being a power, in the discretion of the donee of it, to endorse the note, and convert it into one payable to bearer, whenever he thought fit to do so, for any purpose. It was not laid down in the judgment in those cases that the words used in a power-of-attorney, to express its objects, are always to be construed disjunctively, though they may be so construed; and there is no reason why a rule of construction, intended to aid in arriving at the meaning of the parties, should not be applied in construing a power-of-attorney as much as any other document. JONMENJOY COONDOD v. WATSON

13. — A power-of-attorney contained, amongst others, the power to sell and convert into money “the goods, effects and things belonging to” the principal:—Held, that the word “things” in the power included mortgages as being things in action, there being nothing in the deed which suggested that the things were to be limited to choses in possession and not to choses in action. Held, further, that the mortgages were capable of being transferred by the attorney. In re Dawson & Jenkin's Contract, [1904], 2 Ch. 219 referred to. An executrix is not competent to exercise the power of sale given by statute or will by an attorney: there is no distinction between a power given by statute and a power given by a will. A power-of-attorney, in so far as it delegates to an attorney power to exercise the discretion vested in an executrix, is void. But where the executrix granting the power was actually present when certain deeds of transfer were executed and her attorney had consulted her in all the dealings and she approved of the same, and thereafter, the attorney executed the documents under her approval and where the documents executed did not express whether they were executed under a power given in writing or under verbal instructions:—Held, that the case fell within the legal maxim of ut res magis valeat quam pereat and that it must be taken that the attorney executed the document under the express verbal authority given to him by the executrix principal. JOGENDRACHUNDER DUTT v. APURNA DASSI (1908). 13 C. W. N. 1191

14. — Principal and agent—Bank manager acting as private agent—Transaction for benefit of Bank. A, being in uncontrolled management of the National Bank in Calcutta and purporting to act under a power-of-attorney intended to be given to him in his private capacity, but addressed to him as "acting manager of the National Bank" by B, a constituent of the Bank, without drawing any cheque on B's account, and simply by means of transferring in the books of the Bank Rs. 15,000 from B's deposit account with the Bank to the account of one C who was indebted to the National Bank, purported to make an advance of Rs. 15,000 from B to C, whereas, in fact, the real transaction amounted only to transferring the liability of C to that extent from the Bank to B. Held, that, so far as this transaction was concerned, A could not divest himself of his character of Bank manager, and that, acting as the agent of both parties, he acted to the prejudice of B and to the advantage of the Bank, and that there was, in fact, a breach of his duty to B to which the Bank was a party. Held, also, that A was not able under the power-of-attorney to bind B by consenting to any dealings by the Bank or C with goods in the Bank's godowns which would prejudice B. BEER v. NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA. 19 W. R. 67

15. — Stamp law—Operation of power confined to British India—Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 5. It is not necessary for the Courts in India to consider whether a power-of-attorney issued in England, but which is intended to operate in British India, complies with the fiscal requirements of the stamp laws in England. It is sufficient if such power-of-attorney is stamped according to the stamp laws of British India. Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Ex. 275, and James v. Catherwood, 3 D. & R. 190, followed. Clegg v. Levy, 3 Camp. 166, not followed. Semble: If such a power-of-attorney was intended to operate in England, as well as in British India, it would not be invalid, so far as it was intended to operate in British India, because the requirements of the stamp laws in England had not been fulfilled. It would be sufficient if it complied with the requirements of the Indian law. In the goods of McADAM

16. — Identity, affidavit of—Notary Public—Administration—Affidavit—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 85 and 114—Presumption of regularity—Rules and Orders of the High Court of Calcutta—Rule 748—Direction of Court in particular case to require further evidence of identity. On an application for grant of letters of administration with copy of the will annexed to the constituted attorney of the sole executor of deceased:—Held, that s. 85 of the Evidence Act is mandatory. In the case of a document purporting to be a power-of-attorney and to have been executed before and authenticated by a Notary Public, the authentication of the Notary is to be treated as the equivalent of an affidavit of identity of the executant, and no affidavit of identity is necessary. In any particular case, if the Court is not satisfied, it may, under Rule 748 of the Rules and Orders of the High Court of Calcutta, require further evidence of the verification of the power-of-attorney. In the Goods of MYLNE (1905). I. POWER OF COURT TO RECTIFY MISTAKE.

Power of Court to correct its own mistake—Inherent power—Amendment of sale certificate—Sale certificate including a property not sold—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244. A Court committing a blunder has power to rectify it of its own motion. Where two properties were advertised for sale and one property was sold, but the sale certificate included both the properties and the purchaser got possession of both:—Held, that the Court had inherent power to rectify the mistake by amending the sale certificate and to direct that the delivery of possession of the second property be cancelled. That the matter would also come under s. 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, the question being one between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, and relating to the satisfaction or discharge of the decree. *GOBINDA CHANDRA CHANDA v. ## I. CIVIL CASES.

1. _____ Account—No specific direction as to accounts in the decree—Court cannot direct accounts to be taken before the Commissioner when parties have arrived at an agreement after the decree—Appeal against such an order. A decree of the High Court on the Original Side contemplated an account being taken between the parties, but it was silent on the question as to how that account was to be taken, whether by the Commissioner or by some person selected by both the parties. The Court of first instance decided that where a direction as to account ought to have been incorporated in a decree when passed it was competent to the Court at any stage of proceedings to direct necessary inquiries or accounts to be made or taken. Held, on appeal, that as some account was taken under the decree by a person appointed jointly by the parties, a new agreement had come into existence superseding the decree, and the Court was not competent to make the order appealed against. An appeal lies against an order of a Judge sitting on the Original Side if that order decides a question of some right between the parties. JEHANGIR COWASJI v. THE HOPE MILLS, LIMITED (1908)

2. ———— Adjournment—Failure to procure sufficient evidence—Costs. A plaintiff failed in an ex parte suit to bring forward sufficient evidence to entitle him to a decree, and asked for an adjournment in order to obtain further evidence; the Court granted an adjournment on the terms that the plaintiff should bear the whole costs of the hearing. SHANKS v. SAVAGE I. L. R. 7 Calc. 177

3. ———— Administration suit—Further directions—Advocate-General—By consent, added as party—Right to question validity of legacies—Estoppel—Laches—Stale demand—Will—Khoja Mahomedan will—Gift to a class—Construction. M, a Khoja Mahomedan, died in 1864. By his will and codicil he left his property to trustees upon trust, inter alia, to pay his daughter, L, a monthly sum during her life, and, after her death, to pay it to her children. M's residuary estate was charged in favour of certain charitable objects. In 1868 the Advocate-General commenced a suit (962 of 1868) for the administration of M's estate. In 1869 L died, leaving four children surviving her. In 1871 a decree for the administration of M's estate was granted to R, the husband of L, in another suit (370 of 1870). In 1873 a decree for administration was passed in the Advocate-General's suit (962 of 1868). By the decree the Advocate-General was given liberty to join in taking the accounts and making the enquiries directed in suit 370 of 1870. In 1899 the Commissioner made his final report in suit 370 of 1870, to which, however, exceptions were filed. In 1902 the case came before TYABJI, J., for further directions. Up to this date the validity of the gift to L's children had not been questioned by the parties and the Commissioner's report was based on the assumption that it was valid. The Advocate-General was now by consent of the parties joined as a co-defendant, to simplify and regularize the suit. He thereupon contended that the gift to L's children was bad as transgressing the rule laid down in the Tagore case and claimed that the fund was applicable to the charitable purposes indicated in the residuary gift. The Division Court ruled that the Advocate-General was not entitled at this stage to raise the point. Held (reversing TYABJI, J.), that the Advocate-General was not precluded, even at this stage, from questioning the validity of the gift to L's children. Where the accounts actually taken and completed in one suit are adopted in another, the ordinary practice is to allow the result of those accounts and enquiries to be questioned in the suit wherein they are adopted. A beneficiary is generally taken as sufficiently represented by his trustees; but this does not hold good where the contest lies between the beneficiaries themselves. Held, on further hearing, on the construction of the will, that such of L's children as were in existence at the death of the testator were entitled to an annuity at L's death. ADVOCATE-GENERAL v. KARMALI (1905)

4. ———— Admiralty Court—Consolidation of salvage claims—Civil Procedure Code, 1882—Rules and Regulations under Stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 51—Procedure. On an application by the impugnant for the consolidation of three separate salvage claims made by three different promovents for salvage services rendered by them:—Held (following the more recent English practice), that the claims should not be consolidated against the will of the promovents, but should be heard one after the other successively, subject, however, to one set only of costs being allowed to them in the event of the Court finding at the hearing that the application for consolidation was resisted without sufficient grounds. In such a case (as there is no procedure for such an application prescribed by the Rules and Regulations made in pursuance of 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 51, nor any procedure for consolidation in the Civil Procedure Code), the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England ought to be followed so far as such practice can be applied to this country by analogy. *In the matter of the BRITISH SAILING SHIP "FALLS OF ETTRICK," THE "CHUSAN" v. 5. ———— Application for consolidation of salvage claims—Application for commission to take evidence before written statements are filed. On an application by the impugnant for the consolidation of two separate salvage claims made by two different promovents for salvage services rendered by them and for the issue of a commission to examine the witness of the impugnant de bene esse:—Held, that it is within the discretion of the High Court to consolidate the actions without regard to the consent of the parties, each of the promovents being allowed to appear separately through their own attorney and counsel. Held, further, that, though no written statements had yet been filed, the application for consolidation and for a commission to examine de bene esse was not premature. In re the "Falls of Ettrick," I. L. R. 22. Calc. 511, referred to. The "Strathgarry," [1895], P. D. 264, followed. In the matter of the "DRACHENFELS," "RETRIEVER" v. "DRACHENFELS" 3 C. W. N. 67

10. ———— Act XVIII of 1863—Verification of affidavit. When an individual, who is unable to read and write, presents himself to affirm solemnly or make oath to the truth of an affidavit, it will be sufficient, in order to meet the requirements of s. 9, Act XVIII of 1863, in obtaining his verification, to allow him to affix his "mark" in lieu of his "signature," and, in affirming or swearing him, to vary the usual words by saying "mark instead of signature," in lieu of "signature." ANONYMOUS . . . . . 9 W. R. 357

11. ———— Use of affidavits in motions—Rule to show cause. The practice is in motion to stay execution, and others, to put in a verified petition, or affidavit, the costs of which is allowed in taxation; but where a rule to show cause had been obtained on the facts set out in the plaint, WHITE, J., declined to refuse the hearing of the rule simply because no verified petition or affidavit had been filed. KRISTO MOHINEY DOSSEE v. KALLY PROSONNO GHOSE

12. ———— Non-production of affidavit—Withdrawal of suit. The plaintiff's attorney being under the misapprehension that one of the plaintiffs, who was a material witness, was in Bombay, when in fact he was in England, and an application to consent to a commission had been made to the defendant's attorney, and refused on the eve of the hearing, an application was made to the Judge in Chambers on the morning of the day fixed for the hearing, and supported by an affidavit for the issuing of a commission and for an adjournment of the suit; and the Judge declining to make an order in Chambers, the application was renewed in Court, when the Judge refused to take notice of what occurred before himself in Chambers, and made note that the application for a commission was made upon no affidavit; and as the affidavit (presented in Chambers), having been sent to the office of the plaintiff's attorneys for a copy to be made and served upon the defendant, was not then in Court, the application for a commission and to adjourn the hearing was refused, and plaintiff's counsel not being instructed to proceed with the hearing and leave to withdraw the suit having been also refused, the suit was dismissed. Held, that the Judge was wrong in refusing to postpone the case for the production of the affidavit in Court, and that there was no legal ground whatever for the refusal to withdraw the suit, which was accordingly restored to its place in the list and remanded in order to be tried. DADABHAI NAOROJI & Co. v. SORABJI COWASJI . . . . . 3 Bom. O. C. 55

13. ———— Application for decree on terms of agreement to compromise suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 375. After the hearing of the suit had begun, the plaintiffs and defendants came to an agreement by which they settled all the matters in dispute between them in the suit. The agreement was in writing, and dealt in one clause with the dispute, the subject-matter of the suit, and in a second clause, with another dispute of long standing between the parties, with which the suit had nothing to do. The plaintiff subsequently objecting to consent to a decree being taken in terms of the first clause of the agreement, the defendants took out a rule nisi, calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why the agreement should not be recorded in Court and why the Court should not pass a decree in accordance therewith, under the provisions of s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code. The rule was argued on affidavits on either side, the plaintiffs objecting that in any case the matter could not be decided on affidavits, but evidence must be gone into. Held, that, in the circumstances of the case, no definite procedure having been enjoined by the Code, the matter might properly be decided on affidavits. RUTTONSEY LALJI v. POORIBAI . . . . . I. L. R. 7 Bom. 304

14. ———— Petition—Affidavit, necessity of—High Court Rules 1, 3 and 4—Ch. XII—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 17, 20, 57, and 522—Cause of action—Plaint, return of—Jurisdiction, illegal exercise of. When a petition to the High Court states facts, which are matters of record and which are supported by copies of the order passed by the Court below, such a petition need not be supported by an affidavit. A brought a suit for dower in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saran alleging that the marriage as well as the divorce took place in that district. The defendant objecting to the suit on the ground that he worked and resided at Calcutta, the Subordinate Judge returned the plaint to be presented in the Presidency Small Cause Court. The District Judge, on appeal, declined to interfere with the order of the first Court. Held, that s. 17, cl. (a), of the Civil Procedure Code, applied to the case; and the order returning the plaint was bad in law, the cause of action having arisen in the district of Saran. Held, further, that, inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge had failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law by refusing to accept the plaint, and that the District Judge erred in law in confirming the decision of the first Court, the High Court had authority to interfere, under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. ZAMIRAN v. FATEH ALI (1905)

I. L. R. 32 Calc. 146

15. ———— Affidavit of documents by order of the Prothonotary against Advocate-General—Power of the Court—Prerogative of the Crown—High Court Rule 80a—Civil Procedure Code, s. 129. The position of the Advocate-General in India corresponds by statutory enactments to the position held by the Attorney-General in England and there is ample authority for the view that, generally speaking, the Attorney-General is not called upon to make discovery on oath. An order by the Prothonotary calling upon the Advocate-General to show cause why a suit instituted by him should not be dismissed for want of prosecution is not one which is within the jurisdiction of the Prothonotary to make. *ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF BOMBAY v. I. L. R. 5 Bom. 264

17. ———— Appeal by one plaintiff against another—Rival claimants put on the record as representatives of deceased plaintiff. In a suit for redemption one of the plaintiffs died. A, the adopted son, and B, the daughter, made separate applications under s. 365 of the Civil Procedure Code to be placed on the record. The Judge ordered them both to be put on the record and proceeded with the suit, and finding that A's adoption was proved, and that B was not the legal heir of the deceased, he gave a decree for redemption in favour of A. B appealed making A alone respondent. The Appellate Court held that B, and not A, was heir of deceased, and passed a decree in B's favour against A. On second appeal to the High Court:—Held, that the Judge had no power under s. 367 of the Code to admit on the record both rival claimants as legal representatives or adjudicate by his decree between their rival claims; and that the Appellate Court ought not to have allowed one plaintiff to appeal against another or to have decided the rights of different plaintiffs inter se. *VITHU v. If he does not do so and the application is dismissed, he cannot be allowed to supplement such evidence in a Court of Appeal on appeal from the order dismissing his application. *Hari Das Mukerji v. 28. ————— Rules of Court, 30th November 1889—Memorandum of appeal—Misdescription in—Appeal described as “first appeal from order” instead of “first appeal from decree.” It is not a fatal objection to an appeal that the same is described in the memorandum as “First appeal from Order,” being in reality a first appeal from a decree, it not being shown that the respondent was in any way prejudiced by such misdescription or that by reason thereof an insufficient stamp was placed on the memorandum. *Kedar Nath v. HAR KUMAR PAL CHOWDRY v. ASIATULLAH . . . 3 C. W. N. 150

PRACTICE—contd.

1. CIVIL CASES—contd.

31. ————— Decree awarding costs as against two defendants—Payment by one defendant—Appeal by both defendants jointly to High Court against decree—Decease of defendant who paid during pendency of appeal—Prosecution of appeal on behalf of survivor alone—Reversal of decree by High Court—Claim by legal representative of deceased defendant for restitution of amount paid as costs. A decree was obtained in a District Court against two defendants, by which they were ordered to deliver up certain property and to pay the costs of the suit. These costs were in fact paid by the first defendant. An appeal was preferred by both defendants jointly to the High Court, but the first defendant died while it was pending. The legal representative of the deceased defendant was not brought on the record, and when the appeal came on for hearing it was proceeded with by the second defendant on his own behalf. The result was that the High Court reversed the decree of the District Court, but the High Court decree recited that the appeal had been prosecuted on behalf of the surviving defendant alone. The son and legal representative of the first defendant now prevented a petition in execution, and claimed that the whole decree of the District Court had been reversed and that in consequence he was entitled to restitution of the costs which had been realised by the plaintiffs (counter-petitioners) from the deceased first defendant. Held, that, as it was expressly recited in the High Court decree that the appeal had been prosecuted on behalf of the surviving defendant alone, the decree must be construed as limited to his interests. Held, also, that the decree of the original Court must be regarded as still in force against the first defendant; and his heir, the petitioner, was therefore not entitled to restitution of the costs levied from his father under that decree until he had successfully prosecuted the appeal of his father which was still pending. NATESA AYYAR v. ANNASAMI AYYAR (1901) . . . I. L. R. 25 Mad. 426

32. ————— Appeal—Privy Council—Practice—Concurrent judgments on facts—Disagreement on subordinate points. The Judicial Committee does not ordinarily entertain an appeal from concurrent judgments on a mere question of fact. The mere fact that the two Courts do not agree on all the steps which lead to one and the same conclusion, is no reason for disregarding the above well-known rule. That rule, however, is not an absolute rule, it presses upon the appellant with more or less weight according to the circumstances of the case, and the fact that the Courts have differed on some important, but subordinate questions is a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether the evidence before the lower Courts should be reviewed in detail. 34. ————— Suit for damages for injuries on railway—Appeal decided not on evidence at trial but on observations of Judges at presentation of scene and events of accident on another night than that on which accident occurred. The plaintiff sued the defendants, a Railway Company, for damages for injuries sustained by him when alighting from a carriage which overshot the platform of a station at night, and the evidence on the question of what light there was either natural or artificial, on the night in question being conflicting, it was suggested during the hearing of the case on appeal and agreed to by the counsel for the parties that the Judges should visit the scene of the accident under conditions approximating as nearly as possible to those which prevailed when the plaintiff met with his injuries. This was done, the Judges and the legal advisers of the parties went to the station where a presentation of the scene and events of the accident was gone through by which the Judges were enabled to make a thorough investigation of the material conditions accompanying the accident. They formed their own opinion on the question of the sufficiency or otherwise of the light and gave judgment in accordance with them, reversing the decision of the Court which tried the case. Held, that such procedure was illegal. The result of it was that the appeal was decided not on the testimony given at the trial as to what took place on the night of the accident, but by the Judges' observation of what they saw on another night altogether; and the decision based on it was set aside, the judgment of the first Court being restored. *KESROWJI ISSUR v. the Courts should check the tendency of defeated litigants to evade their defeat by devising a new case which was never set up when it should have been set up. 37. ————— Application after refusal—Making application to another Judge, after refusal by one Judge to make it. It is irregular, when an application has been made to one Judge of the High Court and refused, that the same application should be made to another Judge without stating the facts of the former refusal. VYTHELINGA MUDELLY v. CUNDASAWMY MUDELLY . . . 8 Mad. 21

38. ————— Application to another Judge after refusal of application by one Judge of High Court—Review—Appeal. If an interlocutory order is wrongly refused by one Judge the proper course is to apply for a review or to appeal from it, not to seek to obtain the order by resorting to another Judge, even though arguments should then be forthcoming which were not put before the first Judge. *MOTIVAHU v. 40. ————— Arbitration—Written statement—Application for extension of time—Stay of proceedings—Step in proceedings—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 4, 19. The Calcutta Corporation applied for further time to file their written statement and obtained a fortnight's time. Subsequently they applied to the Court for a reference to arbitration and stay of proceedings. The plaintiffs objected on the ground that an application for further time amounted to a step in the action within s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act:—Held that such an application was a step in the proceedings within s. 19 of the Arbitration Act and that the application for reference to arbitration could not be maintained. *Ford's Hotel Company, Limited v. 41. — Attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 266 (c)—House—Sale in execution—Exemption from liability to attachment or sale—Facts to be taken to exist, which are proved. Only those facts can be taken to exist, which are proved. 43. — Setting down case in general cause list—Entering appearance. The Court has power to order a case to be set down at once in the general cause list, if the defendant enters appearance by his attorney before the time for appearance fixed in the summons has expired. When a defendant so appears, the Registrar ought so to set down the case as a matter of course, or at least ask the Judge in Chambers whether he should do so or not. CUMMING v. GREEN

44. — Cases to be entered in the list of suits for liquidated claims—Rules 281 and 284 of the Calcutta High Court, Original Jurisdiction—Removal of cases improperly entered in that list—Ordinary mortgage suit—Notice of transfer of case. Held, that the practice of the Court having been for many years to place ordinary mortgage suits on the list of suits for liquidated claims in the view that the incidental relief sought in such suits did not prevent them from being regarded as suits in which the claim was in substance a claim only for a liquidated demand in money, the practice should be adhered to. Held, also, that when a suit is transferred from the general list of causes (at the instance of the plaintiff), it is desirable that this should be done on notice to the defendant, so that he may not be taken by surprise. *BENODE LALL ROY v. On attempting to obtain possession, the applicant was obstructed. He applied for removal of the obstruction to the Subordinate Judge, and submitted with his application the unregistered

The power of the commissioner to grant certificates, and of the Court to deal with motion made with reference thereto, considered. Quære: Whether, where a suit has been referred to the commissioner for the purpose of having account taken, such accounts, in the absence of any direction in the decree or order of reference that stated or settled accounts are not to be disturbed, should not be taken without regard to any previous accounts stated or settled between the parties. *RUSTOMJI BURJORJI v. In such a motion affidavits should only be filed (a) when ordered by the Court, if it desire fresh evidence; or (b) by special leave of the Court for the purpose of advancing a fact which does not appear on the face of the proceedings before the commissioner. *SUMAR AHMED v. This rule has always been supplemented by the unwritten rule of the Bar that one or other Counsel must return his brief in good time, if there is a chance of neither being able to attend when the case is called on, and that in case of dispute it is the duty of the junior to return the brief or to make arrangements for some other Counsel to attend until he can come in. *ESMAIL EBRAHIM v. On the case coming again before a differently constituted Bench of the High Court for final disposal :—Held, that the remanding judgment was conclusive on all points therein specifically decided beyond possibility of revision, but that it was otherwise with regard to any part of the judgment, which could be shown to be based on such mistake or error as it would have been the duty of that Bench to correct, if it had been brought to its notice, when the judgment was delivered. Per BATCHELOR, J.—In so far as any part of the remand judgment is based on an assumption or hypothesis, which is now ascertained to be erroneous, it is, we think, competent to us—or rather it is incumbent on us—to disregard it, and to re-open that part of the case affected by the error. When Government grants the revenue of a village considered as a unit of assessment, and in course of time the grantee is able to bring under cultivation land which had previously been uncultivated or even unassessed, it is open to him under the grant to do so and to profit by the new cultivation. *BALVANT RAMCHANDRA v. 70. ——— Evidence taken in particular way—Consent of parties—Jurisdiction of the Court. In a suit to recover damages for wrongful diversion by the defendants of the course of a brook, the Subordinate Judge, at the desire of both the parties, proceeded to the spot of the diversion, made inspection and examined witnesses on the spot. The position of the witnesses were taken down in vernacular by a clerk of the Court. On going through the evidence the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit holding that the defendants had not diverted the course of the brook and the plaintiff had not suffered any damage. The plaintiff appealed and raised a preliminary objection to the procedure of the Subordinate Judge. The Judge in appeal held that the Subordinate Judge's procedure vitiated the decision and reversed the decree and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. On second appeal by the defendants against the order of remand:—Held, reversing the decree of the Judge and restoring the appeal to the file, that the parties if so minded, may ordinarily agree that evidence shall be taken in a particular way and it is a common experience that parties do agree that evidence in one suit shall be treated as evidence in another. That is not a matter which can be said to affect the jurisdiction of the Court. execution—Orders in execution after notice to judgment-debtor and without contest by him—Subsequent objection that the decree was not capable of execution—Judgment-debtor bound by previous orders. A decree, which was in form declaratory, was construed as being capable of execution, and on several occasions execution of it was ordered (after notice to the judgment-debtor, and without contest by him), attachments of the judgment-debtor's property were made, and amounts alleged to be due were paid. Upon a subsequent application for execution being made, it was objected that the previous orders had been erroneously passed under the decree and that no further order could be made. Held, that the judgment-debtor was bound by the previous orders, as the Court which had passed them must be held, rightly or wrongly, to have determined that the decree was capable of execution. *Venkatanarasimha Naidu v. 76. ——— Execution proceedings—Jurisdiction—Decree cannot be varied in the execution department. A decree of the High Court declared the title of the plaintiffs to share in all the properties described in the schedules thereto, excepting in two mauzas, which were declared to belong to the defendants. In execution, the objection was taken that certain parcels sued for and decreed as kasht, or jote, lands were in reality kamat lands, which necessarily, from the character of that holding, must have belonged to the proprietors of the mauzas within the limits whereof those parcels were situated, the proprietors of the mauzas being declared in the decree to be the defendants. The executing Court disallowed this objection, as distinctly involving a variation of the decree. But the objection was allowed by the High Court's decree now appealed from. Held, reversing the order of the High Court, that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the executing Court to vary the decree, which plainly awarded the parcel as jote or kasht lands lying within the villages and defined by measurements, so that there was no doubt as to their identity. To re-open the decree because the defendants raised a new question regarding the nature of the relation of these parcels to the mauzas, would be to re-hear the suit on that matter. That would be an error of procedure of a substantial kind, calculated to cause great irregularity in the conduct of suits. UDWANT SINGH v. TOKHAN SINGH (1901)

It is generally advisable, indeed, when framing an issue on the point of fraud, to set forth in the issue itself a brief statement of the fraud alleged, or at least to refer to the passage in the pleadings, where it is specified. Upon the plaintiff asking for inspection, only certain entries were disclosed, but inspection of the rest was refused. Thereupon the defendant took out a summons to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit. It was objected that this was not the proper mode of procedure, and that the plaintiff should have, under s. 269, Belchambers' Rules and Orders, applied for production and inspection. Held, that in matters of this kind the application should be made in proper form by applying for production and inspection. It was objected that this was not the proper mode of procedure, and that the defendant should take steps when inspection was refused. Held, that, though technically the better way of raising the question would have been to take out a summons for production, the course taken by the defendant might, if preferred, be adopted, and that he was entitled to an order that the plaintiff should make a better and further affidavit showing what parts of the documents he claimed to seal up, and the grounds upon which the claim was based. JADUB LOLL SHAW v. Such an order contemplates that the agent will be a person standing in the position of the party for the purposes of the suit. Held, therefore, that the Court ought not to permit a person formerly in the service of the defendant to inspect as the plaintiff's agent the defendant's books which had been in his charge. ENAMUL HUQ v. 96. Interrogatories—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 121—Ex parte order for interrogatories. S. 121 of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates (1) leave to interrogate, and (2) the service of the interrogatories through the Court. It is the duty of the Court under that section to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate the other side, but not to determine at that stage what questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. Where an ex parte order is made in chambers giving leave to interrogate, the party ordered to answer has a right to come into Court to have the order set aside if the case is one in which interrogatories should not have been allowed. When an order for the administration of interrogatories is properly made, a party objecting to the interrogatories administered may, at his peril, omit to answer the interrogatories to which he objects; but the more prudent course is to file his affidavit in answer, stating in it his objection to answer such questions as he objects to. Where interrogatories are scandalous, or in any way an abuse of the process of the Court, the Court may interfere at any stage. The powers given to the Court by s. 136 should not be exercised except in extreme cases. SHAM KISHORE MUNDLE v. SHOSHIBHOOSUN BISWAS

When interrogatories are delivered with the leave of the Court under s. 121 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court orders such interrogatories to be answered within ten days under s. 126, there is virtually an order passed under the provision of Ch. 101. Refusal to answer—Particulars of damage—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 125, 127. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant bank improperly and without notice, and in violation of an agreement, sold some Government promissory notes, which had been deposited as security for certain loans, and claimed a specified sum as damages or in the alternative a decree for an account. The defendant bank denied the alleged agreement, and asserted that the notes had been sold after due notice and on failure of the plaintiff to comply with the terms on which the loans were made. Interrogatories were administered for the examination of the plaintiff, and amongst them one in the following terms: "State how your estimate of damages to the amount of Rs. 30,000 mentioned in the eighth paragraph of the plaint is arrived at?" Upon the plaintiff declining to answer that interrogatory, the defendant bank applied on notice for an order under s. 127 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring him to answer it fully. Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to answer it. If, on the one hand, it was intended to elicit the principle on which the damages were estimated by the plaintiff, the defendant was not entitled to discovery on that point. If, on the other hand, it was sought to elicit an account of the transactions between the parties, it was unnecessary, as the transactions were within the knowledge of the defendant bank; and if it were not, then the enquiry was premature, as the question whether there had been any wrongful act committed and whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages should be first determined. NECKRAM DOBAY v. Cl. 13 of the will produced in this case was as follows :—"As to my other property which there is, that is the property situated on the east side of the house of my step-brother, I give the same to my younger son Chiranjiv Mahadev for his life. Before a guardian ad litem had been appointed for the minor defendant, an application was made to the High Court to transfer the case from the Mofussil Court to the High Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction by the minor defendant through the next friend. It was contended that the application was informal, and could not be granted, and that no such application could be made on behalf of the infant defendant until a guardian ad litem had been appointed, and then it should be made by him. Held, that the objection should not prevail, and that this application could be made through the next friend. JOTENDRONATH MITTER v. PRACTICE—contd.*1. CIVIL CASES—contd.

—Presumption arising from such non-appearance—Duty of parties to suit to come forward as witnesses in their own case—Circular No. 1750—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 120. A mortgagee sued his mortgagor for possession to which he was entitled under the provisions of the mortgage. The defendant (mortgagor) admitted execution of the mortgage, and pleaded that he had received no consideration for the mortgage. The defendant summoned the plaintiff as a witness, intending apparently to support his case by cross-examining him as to the alleged consideration. The plaintiff, however, did not appear, and the defendant himself did not go into the witness-box at the hearing. Under these circumstances the Court of first instance passed a decree for the plaintiff, holding that the inference which might be made against the plaintiff by reason of his non-appearance would not supply the want of positive proof which the defendant was bound to give of his allegation that he had received no consideration for the mortgage. The lower Appellate Court presumed from the absence of the plaintiff that his accounts did not contain entries showing the payment of consideration to the defendant, but held that such presumption did not relieve the defendant from the obligation of proving that no such consideration had been paid. It therefore confirmed the decree. On second appeal: Held, that the decree should be reversed and the case re-tried. The plaintiff should have been compelled, if possible, to attend and give evidence and produce the mortgage-deed and accounts, and the defendant also should have given evidence on his own behalf and have submitted to cross-examination. SCBBAJI NARSINGH KULKARNI v. As it was not made until the argument of counsel for the defendants was concluded, it should be taken that the form of the motion as made to the Court was acquiesced in. The objection was then too late. KARIM MAHOMED v. RAJOOMA

A suit was brought by a minor, who appeared by her next friend, and a decree was given in her favour. The defendant appealed, making the next friend alone respondent, and had the decree of the Court of first instance modified in his favour. The next friend appealed to the High Court, where the respondent objected to the next friend being heard, on the ground that she was no party to the suit. Held, that the Court would not entertain the objection at the instance of the party through whose fault the error occurred, but that the judgment of the Court below should be set aside, and that of the Court of first instance restored. 131. ——— Suit instituted on behalf of minor by next friend—Application for execution of decree by plaintiff on attaining majority and after death of next friend without complying with requirements of s. 451, Civil Procedure Code—Title of suit. Unless there is an absolute bar created by positive enactment, a person who has attained his full age is prima facie entitled to proceed with a suit instituted on his behalf during his minority, or to make any application therein, and, if necessary, the Court will, as a matter of course, give him leave to proceed or act in his own name. When a person, on whose behalf a suit had been revived and carried on by his next friend, made, after attaining his majority, and long after the death of the next friend, an application in his own name for execution of the decree in the suit without having complied with the requirements of s. 451 of the Civil Procedure Code, as to electing to proceed with the suit and obtaining leave of the Court to do so, and the application was admitted and notice of execution given to the defendant:—Held, under the circumstances, that such omission to comply with the requirements of s. 451, though an irregularity, was not a bar to the application being allowed to proceed. An application under s. 451 for leave to proceed with a suit, does not require any notice, but may be made ex parte at any time. Even if the application in this case therefore were not itself a sufficient indication that the applicant elected to proceed with the suit, and that the Court in allowing him to proceed in his own name gave him the required leave (and semble that would be the case), the Court could give such leave at the hearing of the application nunc pro tunc. The provision of s. 451, which requires the title of a suit to be corrected in such a case,

Defendant pleaded minority at the date of the transactions, denied all liability, also denied receiving Rs. 500, but admitted receipt of Rs. 1500, which sum together with the interest he tendered to the plaintiff in full satisfaction of his claim. On refusal by the plaintiff to accept that sum, it was paid into Court. The plaintiff then applied to the Court for payment to him of the said amount. The defendant contended that the amount should be kept in Court pending the hearing as all liability was denied, and offered to pay interest if plaintiff succeeded in his suit. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to take the money out of Court. Code. The petition becomes contentious not upon the entry of a caveat, but upon the filing of the affidavit in support of the caveat. Where, in consequence of the filing of the affidavit, the matter becomes a suit, the whole suit must be disposed of by the decree of the Court. Where therefore, at the hearing of the suit, the defendant does not appear in support of the caveat, it is not a correct procedure for the Court merely to dismiss the caveat, leaving it to the Registrar to dispose of the petition as a non-contentious matter. The mortgagor thereupon filed a suit impleading both the mortgagee and assignee as defendants. The plaint contained, in substance, a claim for redemption, but it also prayed that the defendants should be required to interplead concerning their claims to the mortgage amount and that the mortgagor should be indemnified in consequence of the loss of the original mortgage-deed. Prior to the hearing the defendants agreed that the assignee was entitled to receive the mortgage amount. The suit was dismissed on the grounds that no interpleader suit could lie, as the plaintiff sought an indemnity from one of the defendants, which gave him a personal interest in the suit. Held, on appeal, that it was erroneous to treat the suit as only one of interpleader. Inasmuch as the plaint also contained in substance a claim for redemption, that was the appropriate relief under the circumstances. Vyvyan

Mere filing of exceptions to the report cannot be deemed to be notice under Rule 615. The words "fraud, surprise or mistake, or such other special ground" in Rule 617 refer to fraud, surprise, or mistake or some other special ground incident to, connected with, or which resulted in the making of, the certificate or report itself; and not to something which has occurred quite outside and independent of the certificate or report. The High Court has power either under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code, or if not, under s. 15 of the Charter Act, to interfere in cases where the lower Courts have not acted correctly in accordance with law. Where a plaintiff failed to secure the production of an important document from the records of another Court though he took all reasonable steps for that purpose and the suit was disposed of by both the Courts of first instance and the Appellate Court without reference to that document, the High Court in revision set aside the judgments of both the Courts. A decree was made, and certain directions were given for the purpose of having a scheme settled, by which the trusts were to be carried out; but before the scheme was finally settled and approved, and while the proceedings were pending, the case was struck out of the board for want of prosecution. Subsequently, both the plaintiff and defendant died. The heirs of the plaintiff then instituted a suit against the Administrator-General as representing the estate of the defendant, for carrying the trusts into execution, and prayed that their suit might be considered as supplemental to the original one. Held, that the original suit, though no longer upon the board, was capable of revival, and that, if no person were living whose consent might be obtained or to whom notice might be given, the Court might give leave without any such consent or notice, and that the proper course to pursue was to allow the plaintiffs to amend their plaint by putting it in the form of a petition under s. 372 of the Civil Procedure Code, the defendant being at liberty to put in any answer which he might have done if the proceeding had been by petition in

Upon the application of the respondent in a second appeal pending before the High Court, an order was passed requiring the appellant to furnish security for the costs of the appeal, and to lodge such security at any time before the hearing. This order purported to be made under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, but neither the application nor the order stated the amount of the security required. At the hearing of the appeal, no security having been lodged, the respondent objected that, with reference to the terms of s. 549, the Court had no option but to dismiss the appeal. Held, that the proper course was to have applied to the Judge who passed the order for security, at any time before the case came on for hearing, for the rejection of the appeal, and that it was too late at the hearing to ask the Court to reject the appeal. THAKUR DAS v. But if, subsequently, a suit is instituted in the High Court by the defendant in the Small Cause Court suit, in which all transactions between the parties can be dealt with, and if he gives security for the total amount of his indebtedness, then it is desirable that there should not be a separate proceeding in respect of the promissory note, though prima facie it does not constitute an item in a running account between the parties. The question of procedure becomes a matter of convenience rather than of right, and justice can be done between the parties by apportionment of costs after the account has been taken in the High Court suit. *ISSUR SINGH v. It is at this latter point that there is a departure of ways, and if the accused who is tried does not intervene at that crucial point, and get the procedure applicable to trials with the aid of assessors enforced, he cannot be heard to complain. *EMPEROR v. in an estate in Sylhet being put up for sale in execution of a decree, the petitioner claimed the right of pre-emption under s. 14, Act XXIII of 1861, and he was thereupon substituted for the actual purchaser. Held, that in such circumstances the Court executing a decree had no authority to substitute the claimant for the actual purchaser without the consent of the latter, and that a party claiming a share under the section cited was simply in the position of a party who, having a right of pre-emption, has observed the requisite formalities to enable him to assert the right, and must resort to a civil suit to obtain the benefit thereof. 11. ——— Transfer by lease—Alienation of transfer of proprietary right. Held, that a provision in the wajib-ul-urz securing a right of pre-emption to the sharers in cases of sale or mortgage was not applicable to transfer by lease, which was not such an alienation as was contemplated by the terms of the wajib-ul-urz, viz., alienation or transfer of proprietary rights. *MANICK CHAND v. The consideration payable by the pre-emptor is the estimated value of the property given in exchange, and not that of the property claimed. SEWA RAM v. RISAL CHOWDHRY . . . 1 Agra 144

Upon this compromise a decree was passed. Subsequently a co-sharer in the village where the property was situate brought a suit for pre-emption upon the contention that the compromise and the decree passed thereon amounted to a transfer to the plaintiff in the former suit within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz. Held, that the suit was not maintainable. HANUMAN RAI v. UDAY NARAIN RAI I. L. R. 7 All. 917

17. ———— Transfer by compromise—Wajib-ul-urz—"Transfer"—"Sale." On the 1st September 1881 L and R entered into an agreement (which was duly registered) with B that in consideration of their bringing a suit for recovery of a 12-anna share in a village which B claimed by right of inheritance against G, they should receive a moiety of the share. L and R found funds for the prosecution of two suits in respect of the share, which on the 5th April 1882 were compromised, B getting 1 anna and 3 pies out of the 12 annas originally claimed by her. In that compromise B stated as follows: "I make over 1 anna to L and R, my partners, in lieu of the prosecution of the two cases. I, the plaintiff, shall remain in possession of the remaining 3 pies." Meanwhile, on the 3rd September 1881, G had sold 3 annas out of the 12 annas share to M. On the 3rd April 1883 M brought a suit against L and R, claiming the right of pre-emption in respect of the 1 anna which they had acquired from B on the allegation that the transfer of the share had taken place on the 5th April 1882. This claim was based on the wajib-ul-urz of the village which gave a right of pre-emption to the co-sharers of any sharer wishing to "transfer" his share. Held, that the compromise of the 5th April 1882 was only a re-adjustment of the amount of the interest in the share between B and L and R; that the real transfer to L and R was given effect to on the 1st September 1881, and that, this having been prior to the acquisition by M of any right in the village, he was not a co-sharer at the time of the transfer; and that he had consequently no right as against L and R by way of claim for pre-emption. LACHMI NARAIN v. MANOG DAT I. L. R. 7 All. 291

18. ———— Sale of property to a stranger—Re-sale to a co-sharer before a suit for pre-emption is brought. Where property in respect of which a right of pre-emption exists in favour of a co-sharer is sold to a stranger, but before a suit for pre-emption is brought passes back into the hands of co-sharer, a suit for pre-emption cannot be maintained, and this rule is not affected by the fact that the co-sharer in whom the property sold to a stranger reverts was a party to its sale to a stranger. Bhagwan Das v. Mahan Lal, I. L. R. 25 All. 421, referred to. LIAKAT HUSAIN v. RASHID-UD-DIN (1906) . I. L. R. 29 All. 125

2. RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION.

1. ———— Sale in execution of decree—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Share sold in execution of decree. A suit by a person claiming possession by right of pre-emption, under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861, of a share sold in the execution of a decree was held to be premature and unmaintainable. The claimant should have sued to set aside the order of the Court confirming the sale in favour of the auction-purchaser and to have himself declared entitled to the pre-emption of the property and to be substituted for the auction-purchaser as its purchaser. SHIB SAHAI v. THIKARAM 7 N. W. 97

2. ———— Property subject to conditional sale—Time for making claim. A party alleging a right of pre-emption in respect of property which is the subject of a conditional sale is bound to make his claim immediately on the expiry of the year of grace mentioned in the notice of foreclosure. AMEER ALI v. BHABO SOONDUREE DEBIA 6 W. R. 116

3. ———— Rights and interests of mortgagee—Share of undivided immoveable property—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 310. The provisions of s. 310 of Act X of 1877 are not applicable in a case where the property sold is not a share of undivided immoveable property, but the rights and interests of a mortgagee in such a share. JAIRAM DAS v. BENI PRASAD . I. L. R. 3 All. 15

4. ———— Co-sharer—Sale in execution of share in immoveable property—Stranger—Highest bidder—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 310. A co-sharer in undivided immoveable property of which a share is sold in the execution of a decree does not, under s. 310 of Act X of 1877, acquire the right of pre-emption as against a stranger to whom such share has been knocked down by merely asserting such right at the time of sale and fulfilling the conditions of sale required by ss. 306 and 307 of that

Act. He must bid at the sale and as high as the stranger before he can acquire a right of pre-emption under that section. TEJ SINGH v. GOBIND SINGH . . . . . I. L. R. 2 All. 850

5. ————— Sale in execution of share in immoveable property—Manner of claiming pre-emption—Highest bidder—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 310. The requirements of s. 310 of Act X of 1877 are not satisfied by the co-sharer preferring his claim to the right of pre-emption before the property is knocked down, and offering to pay a sum equal to that bid by the highest bidder. That section contemplates a distinct bid by the co-sharer in the ordinary manner of offering bids. Tej Singh v. Gobind Singh, I. L. R. 2 All. 850, followed. HIRA v. UNAS ALI KHAN . . . . . I. L. 6. ————— Holder of pattidari estate—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14. A person holding a share in a pattidari estate as mortgagee was not in a position which gave him a right of pre-emption, under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861, in respect of a share in the estate sold in execution of a decree; nor does he obtain such a position because a share in the estate has been put up for sale and knocked down to him. DWAPKA PERSHAD SIKUL v. RAM AUTAR SIKUL . . . . . 7 N. W. 281

7. ————— Right against stranger—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14. A share in the mouzah having been put up for sale in the execution of a decree and knocked down to the defendant, a stranger, the plaintiff, a co-sharer of the share, was held to be entitled under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861, to take the share. RAM AUTAR v. SHEO DUTT . . . . . 6 N. W. 243

8. ————— Pattidari estate—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Sale of land for arrears of revenue—Act XVIII of 1873, s. 177—Act XIX of 1873, s. 188. The provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 were not applicable, where the land was sold in execution of a decree of a Revenue Court. Held, on the assumption that, where land is sold in execution of such a decree, a claim to the right of pre-emption can be preferred under the provisions of s. 177 of Act XVIII of 1873 and s. 188 of Act XIX of 1873, that such claim can only be preferred where the land is a patti of a mehal. Semle: That, where land which is a patti of mehal is sold in execution of such a decree, a claim to the right of pre-emption can be preferred under the provisions of s. 177 of Act XVIII of 1873 and s. 188 of Act XIX of 1873. NARAIN SINGH v. MUHAMMAD FARUK . . . . . I. L. R. 1 All. 277

9. ————— Requisites of valid claim—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Conditions required by Mahomedan law. If a person claiming pre-emption under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 fulfilled the conditions of sale respecting the deposit of the purchase-money, the sale could not be held void merely by the failure of the person to whose bid the property was knocked down also to complete the deposit. All that the claimant was bound to do was to establish that he was a pattidar within the meaning of the section in the estate of which the property sold formed part, and that he had fulfilled the conditions of sale. If he established this, the sale should be confirmed in his favour, unless some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale was shown which would justify the setting aside of the sale. The conditions of pre-emption under the Mahomedan Law did not apply to a claim brought under the section. DABEE PERSHAD v. BISHESHUR PERSHAD SINGH . . . . . 6 N. W. 289

10. ————— Wajib-ul-urz, claim under—Conditions required by Mahomedan law. Held, that the person in whose favour a preferential right of purchase is stipulated for, by the terms of the wajib-ul-urz, is entitled to a decree if he comes forward and claims his right, without unreasonable delay, after he hears that a sale has been made without any tender to him, although he may not have proved specially that he has fulfilled all the conditions required in the case of a claim of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law of Shuffa. KOULA PUT v. MAHARAJ DOOBEY . . . . . 1 Agra 278

11. ————— Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Sale of pattidari estate in execution of decree—Act I of 1841, s. 2—Right of co-sharer. It was incumbent on an officer conducting a sale in execution of decree of land which was a share of a pattidari estate paying revenue to Government, as defined in s. 2 of Act I of 1841, to take notice of a claim made by a person under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861, and to receive the purchase-money as a fulfilment of the conditions of the sale, subject to any question which might be raised by any party interested in the sale as to the claimant's title to advance the claim. When the whole of the purchase-money has been paid by the claimant within due time, the Court executing the decree, unless it is satisfied that he has no right to advance the claim, cannot treat the payment by him as a nullity, but must accept it as a fulfilment of the conditions of the sale respecting the purchase-money, and the sale is not defeasible by the failure of the bidder to complete the deposit of the purchase-money. The sale to the claimant cannot become absolute until it has been confirmed, and until it has become absolute, he cannot maintain a suit for possession. If the claimant has fulfilled the conditions of sale, and his right is clear, the Court executing the decree is bound to give effect to the right. TASUDUK ALI v. MUKSUD ALI 6 N. W. 272

12. ————— Sale in execution of decree. During the minority of two out of four brothers an ikrarnama was entered into between them to the effect that no separation was to take place without the consent of all, and that, if one of them separated without such consent, he was to forfeit his share of the family property, and that, if any one wished to dispose of his share, he was to give his brothers the preference. One F purchased at a private sale the share of M, one of the brothers. On this two of the brothers, A and I, brought a suit against F to set aside the sale as contrary to the terms of the ikrar-nama, and urged their claim to pre-emption. The suit was decreed with a stipulation that the purchase-money should be paid back. This not having been done, F sued M, got a decree, and in execution put up for sale M's rights and interests in the family estate, bought them himself, and took possession. The present suit is by A and I to recover possession on the ground that M had no rights and interests left which could be sold in execution. Held, that, as M had never separated, his share had not been forfeited, and that the only other privilege left to the plaintiffs under the ikrar-nama, viz., pre-emption, could not be exercised, inasmuch as M had not sold his share, the sale having been the act of the Court. FERASUT ALI v. ASHOOTOSH ROY SINGH . . . 15 W. R. 455

13. ——— Right of auction-purchaser as against party whose claim to pre-emption is allowed. The auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree of a share in a pattidari estate seeking to establish his right as against a person whose claim to the right of pre-emption under the provisions of s. 14, Act XXIII of 1861, has been allowed, and in whose favour the sale has been confirmed, cannot maintain a suit for possession of the share, but should sue for a declaration that the person claiming the right of pre-emption has no such right and to set aside the sale. *FARZAND ALI v. 14. ——— Condition for assertion of right—Wajib-ul-urz—Offer of property—Notification that property is for sale and offers will be received—Acquiescence. In order to entitle a co-sharer to assert a right of pre-emption based on the wajib-ul-urz, there must, as a condition precedent to such assertion, be a sale of a share already negotiated with a stranger, and a price fixed with the stranger by the co-sharer desiring to sell. The only mode in which a pre-emptive claim can then be defeated is by proof of a distinct intimation to the co-sharer seeking to maintain such claim, of the contemplated sale, and of the price agreed to be paid by the stranger, of an offer to him (the co-sharer) at such price, and of his refusal to purchase. Where the sale in respect of which the pre-emptive claim was raised was one made by the Collector as Manager of the Court of Wards, and the Collector, before selling the property, issued a proclamation through the tehsildar notifying to all the shareholders that the property was for sale, and that sharers intending to purchase should make offers:—Held, that such a notification was not a sufficiently distinct and definite notice of a negotiated and intended sale to a stranger, so as to estop co-sharers failing to make an offer to purchase from subsequently asserting their pre-emptive rights. SUBHAGI v. MUHAMMAD ISHAK . . . I. L. R. 6 All. 463

15. ——— Association of strangers in purchase—Specification of interest purchased by each person. Where two co-sharers entitled to pre-emption in certain villages associated strangers with them in the purchase of such villages and other landed property:—Held, that they must be regarded in the light of total strangers in respect of the whole of the property included in the sale-deed, and that a note at the foot of the sale-deed mentioning the interest severally purchased by each of the vendees would not entitle them to retain the shares respectively purchased by them. GUNESHEE LAL v. ZARAUT ALI . . . 2 N. W. 343

16. ——— Joint purchase by co-sharer and strangers—Specification of interests taken by purchasers. A co-sharer of an estate sold his share to R, who was also a co-sharer in such estate, and to two other persons, who were not co-sharers, but "strangers," selling it to all of them jointly and collectively for one integral sum as the consideration for the whole. The deed of sale specified that each of the purchasers took a one-third share of the property sold. The co-sharers of the estate were entitled, on the sale by a co-sharer of his share, to the right of pre-emption. Held, that such specification could not alter the joint nature of the sale transaction or permit of its being broken up and treated as involving three separate contracts, so as to entitle R, as a co-sharer having an equal right of pre-emption, to resist, so far as one-third of the property was concerned, a claim by another co-sharer to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of such sale, but R must be regarded as a "stranger" in respect of the whole of the property sold by reason of having associated himself with "strangers." Guneshee Lal v. Zaraut Ali, 2 N. W. 343, observed on. MANNA SINGH v. RAMADHIN SINGH I. L. R. 4 All. 252

17. ——— Wajib-ul-urz—Co-sharers—"Ekjaddi." The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption, in cases of sale, to "brothers," and provided that, on refusal by a "brother," there should be a right of pre-emption in favour of co-sharers in the thoke who were related to the vendor by descent from a common ancestor ("hissadaran ekjaddi thoke"). It was also provided that, in the event of any dispute arising as to price, it should be settled by arbitration, and that, "if the co-sharers do not take at the amount fixed by the arbitrators," the co-sharer desiring to sell might make the transfer to a stranger. Held, that co-sharers who were not of common descent from the vendor were entitled to pre-emption after own brothers and co-sharers ekjaddi and to have preference over strangers. Guneshee Lal v. Zaraut Ali, 2 N. W. 343, followed. SABIR ALI v. YAD RAM . . . I. L. R. 9 All. 660

19. Co-sharers—Recorded co-sharers—Benami purchase of shares—Sale by co-sharer—Claim for pre-emption resisted by person claiming to be co-sharer by virtue of benami transaction—Equitable estoppel. A secret purchase of benami shares in a village does not constitute the purchaser a co-sharer for the purposes of pre-emption either under the Mahomedan law or under the provisions of a wajib-ul-urz, so as to enable him upon the strength of the interest so acquired to defeat an otherwise unquestionable pre-emptive right preferred by a duly recorded shareholder who had no notice direct or constructive of his title, and asserted immediately upon his purchase of a share, for the first time, in his true character. *Ramcoomar Koondoo v. 20. Co-sharer—"Proprietor"—Transferee of lands in a village who has not obtained mutation of names in his favour—Wajib-ul-urz. In a suit for pre-emption under a wajib-ul-urz which gave a right of pre-emption to "co-sharers" in a village:—Held, that the word "co-sharer" included a person who had acquired lands in the village, which were not merely sir of a co-sharer, and were not grove-lands held by a licensee from a zamindar, but lands belonging to a zamindar and in his occupation, notwithstanding the fact that he had not yet obtained mutation of names in respect thereof. *DAKHNI DIN v. One of the co-sharers brought a suit for pre-emption which the vendee defendant resisted on ground that he also was a co-sharer in the mehal, and the plaintiff had therefore no preferential right. This contention was based on a former purchase by the defendant under a deed of sale executed by a co-sharer: and comprising (i) an isolated plot of land in the mehal; (ii) sir lands in the mehal. Held by the Full Bench, that, it being found that the vendee-defendant had already become a co-sharer in the mehal prior to the date of the purchase which was in question in the suit, the plaintiff had no preferential right of pre-emption. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The decisions of the Full Bench in Naimat Ali v. Asmat Bibi, I. L. R. 7 All. 626, have overruled Hazari Lal v. Ugrah Rai, All. Weekly Notes (1884) 103, and Rup Ram v. Mungni, All. Weekly Notes (1886) 136. *SAFDAL ALI v. DOST MUHAMMAD. I. L. 23. Pre-emption among co-sharers under the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), ss. 9 to 13—Pre-emptor's right, as such, dependent on the intending vendor's right to sell—Accounts between co-sharers—Contribution, right to, for expenses of suit. Pre-emption, as declared in the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, is not applicable where the co-sharer claiming it denies the title of the co-sharer proposing to sell, alleges that the latter is not a sharer, and says that he himself is entitled to the property. One of two co-sharers, entitled to equal shares in an inheritance, having taken possession of the whole, was used by the other for her share, with mesne profits from the date of the suit. To provide costs, the latter had sold to her co-plaintiffs the right to claim half of her share. The defences were—(i) relinquishment of her claim in favour of the defendant; (ii) that the defendant had a right of pre-emption as to part, in consequence of the above transaction; (iii) that the share in dispute was subject to a proportion of the debts due from the estate of the deceased, chargeable on the whole inheritance; and that, if the plaintiffs should be held to be entitled to a decree, they should also be declared liable to pay, according to shares, their part of all the debts of the deceased liquidated by the defendant, as well as a proportion of money which he had expended, in good faith, in litigation for the protection of the inheritance. As to (i), the two Courts below concurred in the finding that no relinquishment had taken place. As to (ii), it was pointed out that there had been no attempt to sell a share of the inheritance, but only to sell a share in a suit; and it was held that the position taken up by the defendant was inconsistent with his claiming to pre-empt, so that pre-emption was inapplicable. As to (iii), it was held that, although the plaintiffs could not have a decree for mesne profits during the whole period of the defendant's possession, yet, if any account was to be taken of the defendant's payments, it must also be taken of his receipts; and it was held that the incidental benefit to the plaintiffs, who had not authorized the litigation, in which expense had been incurred, did not give rise to any implied contract on their part, or render them liable in equity for any portion of that expense. *ABDUL WAHID KHAN v. To constitute a pattidari estate as contemplated by the 2nd section of the Act, it was necessary not only that it should come within the express terms of that section, but also that it should be liable to the same incidents which attached to the estates described in the section by the other provisions of the same Act. *SALIG RAM v. 30. ——— Wajib-ul-urz—Partition of mehal—Mode of division of property where there are several pre-emptors equally entitled. The wajib-ul-urz, framed in 1856, of a village consisting of several pattis or thokes, gave a right of pre-emption to the owners of each thoke in respect of property situate in every other thoke, when such property was sold to anyone having no share in the village co-parcenary. The mehal subsequently became the subject of perfect partition under the N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), and one of the pattis was constituted a separate mehal and a new wajib-ul-urz was framed for it. Prior to the partition, a proprietor of land both in the pattis which remained in the original mehal and in the patti which formed the new mehal sold property in both to a stranger. Thereupon a co-sharer in the original mehal brought a suit for pre-emption in respect of the property situate therein which had been sold, excluding the property situate in the new mehal. Held, that the effect of the partition was to exclude property situate in the new mehal from the operation of the wajib-ul-urz framed in 1856, and to place it under new conditions as to the right of pre-emption; that the plaintiff could, after the separation, exercise no such right against and in respect of shareholders and property so separated, nor could the separate share-holders exercise any right of pre-emption against the plaintiff and his property remaining in the mehal from which they had separated; and that the suit to pre-empt that portion only of the property sold which was situate in the original mehal was maintainable. *Durgha Prasad v. 31. ——— Partition of village, originally one, into three separate mehals—New record of village customs framed on partition—Wajib-ul-urz—Co-sharers—Rules of the Board of Revenue of the 13th November 1875—N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 257. Where at the settlement of a village constituting a single mehal a record-of-rights was framed giving certain pre-emptive rights to the co-sharers in the village, but subsequently the village was divided by perfect partition into three separate mehals and in accordance with the rules of the Board of Revenue of the 13th November 1875, issued under s. 257 of Act XIX of 1873, a new record of village customs was framed which did not give to the sharers in any one of the new mehals any right of pre-emption in respect of land situated in another mehal, it was held that the latter record of village customs was a valid and binding document, and no right of pre-emption existed in favour of the co-sharers in any one mehal in respect of land situated in another mehal. Per ARMAN, J.—Where a village, originally one, is divided by perfect partition into two or more mehals unless at the time of partition a right of pre-emption is specifically reserved by the co-sharers in respect of lands lying outside any given mehal, such right of pre-emption is not to be presumed from the mere fact that when the village formed but one mehal, the co-sharers had pre-emptive rights against such other. Mote Sah v. Guklee, S. D. A. N.-W. P. (1861), Vol. 2, p. 506, and Jai Ram v. Mahabir Rai, I. L. R. 7 All. 720, referred to. Under the above circumstances, the mere retention of a community of interest in certain property, such, e.g., as roads, etc., will not give the sharers in one mehal any right of pre-emption over land situated in another. *Nazir-ud-din v. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 107. When a mehal is divided by perfect partition into two or more separate mehals, a separate record-of-rights should be framed for each of the new mehals. Where under such circumstances no fresh records-of-rights are framed for the new mehals, the co-sharers in any one of the new mehals cannot, unless under very exceptional circumstances, claim, under the terms of the old records-of-rights applicable to the original undivided mehal, pre-emption in respect of land situated in any of the other new mehals. *Ghuree v. 34. ——— Meaning of the terms “patti” and “patti of mehal”—Co-sharers—N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), ss. 166, 168, 188—N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 177—Interpretation of statutes. The expression “patti of a mehal” as used in s. 188 of the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) means a division of a mehal distinct from the share of an individual co-sharer. The right of pre-emption, therefore, which is given by the above-named section is not exercisable on the sale merely of the share of an individual co-sharer not amounting to such a division of a mehal. Moreover, the provisions of s. 188 of Act XIX of 1873 do not apply to a sale under s. 168 of the same Act of land other than that in respect of which the arrears which it is sold to satisfy accrued. Hence, where the share of a co-sharer in an imperfect pattidari village, not being the land in respect of which the arrears of rent, for the satisfaction of which the said share is sold, are due, is sold under the provisions of s. 177 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), no right of pre-emption can be claimed in respect of such sale. So held by EDGE, C.J. and YOUNG, J., MAHMOOD J. (contra). There being no statutory definition of the word patti, that word must be taken in its ordinary acceptation, and in that acceptation it means the share of a pattidar, whether such share amounts to a definite division of a mehal or not. The exigencies of the law of pre-emption require that in s. 188 of Act XIX of 1873, the word patti should be construed in its broader signification as equivalent to any share of a pattidar. The words of s. 168, which provide that land sold under that section is to be proceeded against “as if it were the land on account of which the revenue is due under the provisions of this Act,” render the incidents of sales under s. 166, including pre-emption applicable to sales under s. 168, with the exception that in such case only the defaulter’s interest in the land sold passes by the sale. Hence a right of pre-emption would accrue under s. 188 in respect of the compulsory sale of any share of a co-sharer, though such share did not amount to a patti in the sense of a definite division of a mehal. *BAIJ NATH v. for the whole area has been held to apply generally to the new mehals, and such division has been held not to affect covenants existing between the co-sharers under such wajib-ul-urz, distinguished from cases where a new wajib-ul-urz has after the division been drawn up for each mehal. *Gokal Singh v. 36. ——— Effect of perfect partition—Wajib-ul-urz—Co-sharers—Purchase of equity of redemption by mortgagee in possession—Acquiescence—Equitable estoppel. The wajib-ul-urz of three villages which originally formed a single mehal gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers in case of transfers of shares to strangers. Afterwards the shares in these villages were made the subject of a perfect partition and divided into separate mehals. Subsequently, by two deeds of sale executed on the 13th January 1884, and registered on the 17th January 1884, some of the original co-sharers sold to strangers their shares in all three villages. At the time of the sale, the shares in two of the villages were in possession of the vendees under a possessory mortgage, the amount due upon which was set off against the purchase money. The share in the third village was, at the time of the sale, in possession of another of the original co-sharers under a possessory mortgage. On the 17th January 1885 this last-mentioned co-sharers brought a suit against the vendors and the vendees to enforce his right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz in respect of the shares sold in the three villages. Held, that, notwithstanding the partition of the village into separate mehals, the existing wajib-ul-urz at the time of partition must be presumed to subsist and govern the separate mehals until it was shown that a new one had been made. Gokal Singh v. Mannu Lal, I. L. R. 7 All. 772, referred to. Held, also, that the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff, by reason of his having omitted in a suit previously brought against him for redemption of his mortgage, and dismissed for want of jurisdiction, to set up in defence any right of pre-emption or to express any desire to purchase, was equitably estopped by acquiescence in the sale from asserting his pre-emptive right. *SHIAM SUNDER v. his step-mother, as guardian of her son, defendant No. 1, then an infant, made a division of the family property under a deed of partition by which (inter alia) a house was divided: the deed contained a covenant that if either co-parcener should desire to sell his share of the house, the other should have the right of pre-emption. Defendant No. 1, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, sold his share of the house to defendant No. 3 for R130 under a sale-deed which referred to the deed of partition. The plaintiff now sued to enforce his right of pre-emption, and in the course of the suit ordered to pay R130. Held, (i) that the purchaser had constructive notice of the covenant in the deed of partition; (i) that the covenant was not invalid, and that it was unnecessary for the plaintiff to prove tender by him of the purchase-money before suit. RAJARAM v. 46. ———— Sale to a co-sharer and stranger—Specification of interest sold to stranger and price—Right of pre-emption of vendee co-sharer. The principle of denying the right of pre-emption, except as to the whole of the property sold, is that by breaking up the bargain the pre-emptor would be at liberty to take the best portion of the property and leave the worst part of it with the vendee. The rule applies only to those transactions which, while contained in one deed, cannot be broken up or separated. It should be limited to such transactions, and the reason of it does not exist where the shares sold are separately specified, and the sale to the stranger is distinct and divisible, though contained in the same deed as the sale to the co-sharers. considerations paid by the co-sharers and the stranger vendees respectively. In a suit for pre-emption by certain co-sharers of the same patti as the vendor, the lower Appellate Court held that, although the co-sharers-vendees had a pre-emptive right of the same degree as the plaintiffs, nevertheless they, having joined a stranger with them in purchasing the property, had forfeited their right, and could not resist the claim even in respect of such portion as they had purchased under the sale-deed. Held, that this view was erroneous, and that, inasmuch as the deed of sale contained an exact specification of the shares purchased by the co-sharers-vendees, who had an equal right of purchase to that of the plaintiffs in respect of such shares, and as the shares purchased and the consideration paid by the stranger vendee were also exactly specified, the lower Court should not have decreed the claim for pre-emption as to that portion of the property which had been purchased by the co-sharers. SHEOBHAROS RAI v. 50. ——— Claim based upon custom—Evidence afforded by obsolete wajib-ul-arz—Rules of the Board of Revenue for the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts (B. E. C. 8—1, s. 38). The plaintiffs brought their suit in 1890 to pre-empt certain property situated in the Gorakhpur district. Their claim was based upon two grounds: one, an alleged contract said to be recorded in and proved by a wajib-ul-arz of 1860 relating to the village in question; and the other, a custom of pre-emption alleged to be existing in the village. The period during which the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 was in force expired prior to the sale which gave rise to the right of pre-emption sought to be enforced. Subsequently to the expiration of that wajib-ul-arz certain rules had been framed, with reference to the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts, the material portions of which, for the purposes of the present case, were as follows: "A memorandum of the village customs will be appended to each khewat by the Assistant Settlement Officer, when he verifies the jamabandi, and it will take the place of the document hitherto known as the wajib-ul-arz" . . . "In regard to any custom or constitution peculiar to the mehal, the following matters should be noticed [class (d), s. 25]: (a) Pre-emption (as regards mehals which belong to other than Mahomedan proprietors) when the proprietors expressly demand that it may be noted and proved conclusively that the custom exists." At the new settlement made in accordance with these rules, no mention of the right of pre-emption, as obtaining in the mehal in question, was recorded. Upon these facts it was held by EDGE, C.J., and BURKITT, J., that having regard to the rules above-mentioned framed by the Board of Revenue for the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts, the mere absence of any mention of the right of pre-emption in the new memorandum of village customs was in itself no evidence that the custom of pre-emption had ceased to exist, and that the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 might be used as evidence of the existence of such a custom. Per AIKMAN, J.—The absence from the new memorandum of village customs of any mention of the existence of a right of pre-emption was a circumstance which the Court would be entitled to take into consideration in any conflict of evidence as to whether or not the custom of pre-emption did exist. *SADHU SAHU v. 51. ——— Wajib-ul-arz—Custom—Mahomedan Law—Immediate and confirmatory demands. The wajib-ul-arz of a village gave a right of pre-emption "according to the usage of the country." In a suit for pre-emption, there was no evidence to show what in fact was the usage prevailing in the districts in regard to pre-emption. There was no evidence that the plaintiff had satisfied the requirements of the Mahomedan law as to immediate and confirmatory demands, or that there was any custom which absolved him from compliance with those requirements, or that he was at any time willing to pay the actual contract price. Held, that, in the absence of evidence of any special custom different from or not co-extensive with the Mahomedan law of pre-emption, that law must be applied to the case, and that, under the circumstances above stated, the suit failed, and must be dismissed. *Fakir Rawot v. 52. ——— Pre-emptor out of possession of his share—His own share lost by him pending appeal. The plaintiff instituted this suit to enforce her right of pre-emption in respect of a share in a village of which she alleged she was a co-sharer with the vendors. The defendants to the suit were the vendors, the vendees, and others who were rival claimants for pre-emption in the share sold. The rival pre-emptors alone defended the action on the ground among others that plaintiff was not in possession of her own share in the village out of which she alleged that her right to claim pre-emption arose. The Court of first instance dismissed her suit. On appeal, the District Judge in effect dismissed her claim as against the defendants who were the rival pre-emptors, but gave the plaintiff a right to obtain the share if the other pre-emptors did not avail themselves of the decree which they had obtained in their action. On the 12th of January 1887 plaintiff's second appeal was admitted, and on the 20th January plaintiff's share in the village out of which her claim to pre-emption in respect of the share sold arose was sold in execution of a decree in another suit. Respondent contended that, as since the appeal the share out of which plaintiff alleged that her right arose was sold, she could not get any decree now in her favour. Held, that this Court as a Court of appeal has only got to see what was the decree which the Court of first instance should have passed, and if the Court of first instance had wrongly dismissed the claim, the plaintiff cannot be prejudiced by her share having been subsequently sold in execution in another suit; such a sale could not have affected her right to maintain the decree, if he had obtained a decree in her favour in the Court of first instance, either on review or on appeal, nor could it have been made the ground of appeal. Further, plaintiff being out of possession of her share at the time she instituted the suit for pre-emption was immaterial, the Court should have ascertained whether the plaintiff was at the date of suit entitled in law to the share out of which her right of pre-emption was alleged to have arisen. Held by MAHMOOD, J., that the passage from Hamilton's Hedaya by Grady, p. 562, means that in the pre-emptive tenement the pre-emptor should have a vested ownership and not a mere expectancy of inheritance or a reversionary or any kind of contingent right, or any interest falling short of full ownership. *SAKINA BIBI v. In August 1885 the mortgagee instituted a suit for possession of the mortgaged property. On the 19th September 1885, the suit was compromised, the mortgagee accepting a part of the mortgaged property, and relinquishing the remainder. A decree was passed in the terms of the compromise. Subsequently a suit for pre-emption was brought against the mortgagor and mortgagee to enforce pre-emption in respect of the alienation. The plaintiff claimed to pre-empt the whole of the property to which the deed of 1878 related, including the portion relinquished by the conditional vendee under the compromise and decree of the 19th September 1885. Held that, although upon the expiration of the year of grace, the ownership of mortgaged property vested in a conditional vendee, even though he might not have obtained a decree establishing or declaring his right, and the right of pre-emption accrued on the date when the conditional sale thus became absolute, yet foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation, being of a purely ministerial character, were not conclusive or even prima facie evidence in a subsequent litigation against the conditional vendor that a valid foreclosure had been duly effected; that strict observance of the requirements of the Regulation were conditions precedent to the right of foreclosure; and that, in the present case, as the plaintiff had not asserted or attempted to prove that all those requirements had been fulfilled so as to result in an actual foreclosure and consequent accrual of pre-emption at the end of the year of grace, no foreclosure was shown to have taken place prior to the compromise of the 19th September 1885, and the plaintiff's right of pre-emption accrued on and must be referred to that date, and consequently extended only to the property to which the compromise related, and the price payable by the plaintiff was the amount specified in the compromise. *Bhadu Mahomed v. 55. ———— Right among co-sharers of thoks—Village divided into several mahals—Rights of pre-emption given to co-sharers in the village—The wajib-ul-arz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to share-holders in a patti, then to those in a mahal and lastly to those in a village. The village was divided into several thoks. One of the thoks, viz., Jaraoli, was subsequently sub-divided into several mahals and under the new arrangement the thoks were done away with. A share was sold in the thok so sub-divided and was purchased by a co-sharer in one of the old thoks. A co-sharer in one of the mahals of thok Jaraoli sued for pre-emption. Held, that the vendee being a co-sharer in the village, the plaintiff had no preferential right of pre-emption inasmuch as the old pattis and thoks had been done away with. *Daljanam Singh v. 57. ——— Assignment of mortgagee's rights—Wajib-ul-arz—Assignment of mortgagee's rights by mortgagee in possession—Sale to stranger who before suit brought, becomes a co-sharer. Held, that the assignment of mortgagee rights in a share in a village, by a co-sharer mortgagee in possession to a stranger, is not a transfer of any part of the mortgagee's "haqqiyat" in the village, and will not give rise to any right of the nature of pre-emption in the absence of express provisions relative to mortgagees in the village wajib-ul-arz. Nand Lal v. Bansil, I. L. R. 20 All. 19, referred to. Held, also, that, if a stranger purchases a share in a village in respect of which a right of pre-emption subsists in favour of co-sharers, but, subsequently to such purchase, and before any suit for pre-emption is brought in respect of such share, becomes himself, apart altogether from the purchase in dispute, a co-sharer in the village, he cannot be ousted by any co-sharer, not having superior pre-emptive rights to himself. *Serh Mal v. 58. ——— Customary law of Hindus in Behar—Pre-emption—Claim by a non-resident—Validity—Sham sale—Right of suit. Although there may be a custom of pre-emption amongst the Hindus of Behar, it cannot be availed of by persons, who are neither natives of, nor domiciled in, the district, in which the property is situate. A native of Balia in the North-Western Provinces cannot claim the right of pre-emption in respect of properties situate in the district of Chapra. Where the sale is not a bona fide one, but a sham transaction, no right of pre-emption arises. PARSASTH NATH TEWARI V. DHANAI OJHA AND DEWAKI-NUNDAN MISSEK (1905) . . . 9 C. W. N. 874

59. ——— Concurrent suits for pre-emption brought by co-sharers having equal rights—Form of decree. Where, pending a suit brought by one co-sharer for pre-emption, another co-sharer, having equal rights with the first, filed a similar suit for pre-emption of the same sale, it was held, that the second plaintiff was entitled to a decree for pre-emption in respect of one-half of the property sold. *Jai Ram v. the making of the talab-i-ishtishhad is required, it is absolutely necessary that at the time of making this demand reference should be made to the fact of the talab-i-mawasibat having been previously made and this necessity is not removed by the fact that the witnesses to both demands are the same. *Abid Husain v. 61. ——— Insolvency—Refusal to purchase—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 351 and 352—Private sale by Collector in pursuance of orders of Civil Court exercising jurisdiction in insolvency. In order to debar a party entitled to pre-empt a sale from exercising his right an opportunity to purchase must be given when a definite agreement to purchase at a fixed price has been entered into with a stranger. It is not enough to offer property to a person entitled to pre-empt before an agreement to purchase has been entered into. Where in pursuance of orders passed by the Civil Court in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction certain revenue-paying property of the insolvent was sold by the Collector, but by private contract and not at public auction, it was held, that such a sale did not oust the pre-emptive rights of such persons as were otherwise entitled to claim pre-emption. *Baij Nath v. 62. ——— Mahomedan law—Shafi-i-khalit—Easement—Owner of dominant tenement. Under the Mahomedan law of pre-emption the owner of the dominant tenement has in respect of a sale of the servient tenement a right of pre-emption as a shafi-i-khalit, which is preferable to the right of one, who is merely a neighbour as regards the property sold. *Shaikh Karim Buksh v. 63. ——— Two successive purchases by same vendee—Claim to be a co-sharer at date of suit on first purchase in virtue of the second purchase. Where in a suit for pre-emption, it appeared that the vendee had, prior to the date of the suit, made a second purchase in regard to which no suit had been filed prior to the date of the institution of the suit in regard to the first purchase, but limitation had not expired in regard to the second purchase:—Held, that the vendee could not be considered by virtue of his second purchase to have been a co-sharer at the date of the institution of the suit on the first purchase. *Bhagwan Das v. 64. ——— Under-proprietor—Act XVIII of 1876 (Oudh Laws Act), Part III, Chapter II—“Member of the village community”—Right of under-proprietor to pre-empt a mahal sold by a proprietor. Held, that, under cl. 3 of s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, a person holding an under-proprietary interest in a mahal sold by the Court of Wards, on behalf of the proprietor of the mahal, was entitled to pre-emption in respect of such mahal as against the vendor. DRIG BIJAI SINGH v. 65. ——— Cause of action—Wajib-ul-arz—Acquisition by defendants to a pre-emption suit of a title as co-sharers—Suit dismissed. After an alleged cause of action for pre-emption had arisen, but before suit brought, the defendants vendees acquired by the dismissal of another suit for pre-emption brought against them by two of the plaintiffs on a different cause of action, a title as co-sharers in the village, in which the property sought to be pre-empted lay. Held, that the title so acquired was a good answer to the subsequent suit for pre-emption. The principle laid down in Janki Prasad v. Ishar Das, I. L. R. 21 All. 374, and Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal, I. L. R. 21 All. 441, applied. RAM HIT SINGH v. NARAIN RAI (1904)

66. ——— Pre-emptive rights of manager of Hindu temple—Wajib-ul-arz. Held, that the manager of a Hindu temple, who as such manager holds zamindari property on behalf of the temple, has the same rights of pre-emption (or pre-mortgage) under the village wajib-ul-arz as any other zamindar in the village may possess. LEKHRAJ v. 67. ——— Talab-i-mawasibat—Mahomedan Law—Power of general attorney to make the talab-i-mawasibat—Pleadings—Practice. Where the plaintiff in a pre-emption suit alleged that the first demand or talab-i-mawasibat was made for him by his general attorney and the defendant did not deny that the person in question was the general attorney of the plaintiff, but in fact no mukhtarnama or copy of it was filed, the original being filed in another appeal then pending before the lower Appellate Court. Held, that, looking to the pleadings, the lower Appellate Court, if it had any doubt on the point, should either have examined the other record or at least have given the plaintiff an opportunity of filing the mukhtarnama or a copy. Held, further, that the first demand or talab-i-mawasibat can be made by a general attorney. Abadi Begam v. 69. ——— Contract for period of settlement—Wajib-ul-arz—Effect of expiry of period of settlement pending suit for pre-emption. Held, that in the case of a suit for pre-emption based upon a contract embodied in the wajib-ul-arz the rights of the plaintiff remained unaffected by the fact that the period of the current settlement expired during the pendency of the suit. Janki Prasad v. Ishar Das, I. L. R. 21 All. 374, and Ram Gopal v. Piari Lal, I. L. R. 21 All. 441, distinguished. GOPAL PRASAD v. BADAL SINGH (1908)

70. ——— Vendee stranger at date of sale—Subsequent acquisition of share by vendee—Cause of action—Lis pendens. Where a suit for pre-emption was dismissed for deficiency of court-fees in both the Courts below, which decree was subsequently reversed by the High Court and the case remanded, and the vendee in the meantime acquired the status of a co-sharer:—Held, that the suit could not be dismissed, the pre-emptor having been entitled to a decree at the date of the institution of the suit. Held, further, that even if the date of decree can be looked to, that date must be the date on which the decree ought to have been made in the plaintiff's favour and not a later date. ROHAN SINGH v. BHAN LAL (1909)

I. L. R. 31 All. 530

3. CONSTRUCTION OF WAJIB-UL-ARZ.

1. ——— Presumption of compliance with conditions of law—Intention of parties. Held, that, where a pre-emptive claim is based on the wajib-ul-arz, it is not to be assumed that the claimant of pre-emption complied with the peculiar conditions which, under the Mahomedan law, are essential to give validity to such a claim, unless expressly provided by the wajib-ul-arz, and the Court construing such contracts ought to consider the intention of the parties as expressed in those contracts, and to give effect to them without alteration or addition. CHOWDHRY BRIJ LALL v. GOOR SUDAI . Agra. F. B. 128 : Ed. 1874, 95

2. ——— Custom—Mahomedan law. In a suit for pre-emption based on a wajib-ul-arz the material words of the wajib-ul-arz under the heading of “Custom for pre-emption” were as follows: “At the time a proprietary share is transferred a right of purchase will vest, first, in a co-sharer of the same family, and then in the other co-sharers of the village in preference to a stranger, provided that the same price is paid by the co-sharer as is offered by the stranger. Held, that these words were intended to define a special custom of pre-emption, and did not merely mean that the custom of pre-emption according to the Mahomedan law was to be followed. Ram Prasad v. Abdul Karim, I. L. R. 9 All. 513, distinguished. JASODA NAND v. KANDHAIYA LALL . I. L. R. 13 All. 373

3. ———— Wajib-ul-arz not signed by lambardar or co-sharers. Where a wajib-ul-arz was not signed by the lambardar or by any of the co-sharers of the village for which it was framed, but was found to have been in existence without having been questioned by any of the parties who might have been affected thereby for a period of some thirteen years:—Held, that the wajib-ul-arz might be taken as prima facie evidence of the custom of the village for which it was framed. The said wajib-ul-arz contained a clause relative to pre-emptive rights to the following effect: "When any muafidar in the patti desires to transfer his share, then first a shareholder in the patti takes it, and if he does not take it, then another man who desires to take it takes it." Held, that this clause was declaratory of the village custom, and that it was not intended thereby to adopt the Mahomedan law of pre-emption. RUSTOM ALI KHAN v. ABBASI BEGAM . I. L. R. 13 All. 407

4. ———— "Brethren"—Sharers in patti—Preferential right. Where the wajib-ul-arz provided that alienation should be first made to brethren of common ancestor, and then to the other sharers of the patti:—Held, that the brethren in whose favour the first right of pre-emption was secured must be construed to be brethren who were sharers in the patti. HUR SAHAI v. JAWALA . 2 Agra 31

5. ———— Bhai-band—Suit to enforce the right of pre-emption—Non-joinder of vendor—Mortgage. In a suit for pre-emption it was objected by the vendee in second appeal that the vendor had not been made a party. Held, that, whether the omission to make the vendor a party in a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption renders the suit unmaintainable or not, as the vendee had not been prejudiced by such omission in this case, the objection taken at such a late stage of the case could not be allowed. Held, also, that the word "bhai-band" in the wajib-ul-arz in this case meant the brotherhood of the village, and not merely those persons who were related by blood. S. A. No. 1054 of 1881 decided the 1st April 1882 referred to. HIRA LAL v. RAMJAS . I. L. R. 6 All. 57

6. ———— Shikmi showkayan—Preference to sharers in thoke—Sharers in village. Held by a Full Bench, in concurrence with the lower Court, that the proper construction of the words "shikmi showkayan" used in a clause of the administration paper was that they gave a preference to sharers in the thoke over those who were merely sharers in the village. JAY MULL v. KESREE

PRE-EMPTION—contd.*3. CONSTRUCTION OF WAJIB-UL-ARZ—contd.

7. ———— "Intiquial"—Absolute transfer—Conditional sales and usufructuary mortgages—Alienation. Held, on the construction of a wajib-ul-arz that the word "intiquial" not only signifies an absolute transfer, but also applies to conditional sales and usufructuary mortgages. CHUTTUR MULL v. CHUTTUR KISHORE LALL . 3 Agra 396

8. ———— Co-sharers—Members of joint Hindu family. The members of a joint and undivided Hindu family, other than that member who is recorded in the Collector's book as a sharer in the mehal, are "co-sharers," for the purposes of pre-emption, in the sense of the wajib-ul-arz. GANDHARP SINGH v. SAHIB SINGH . I. L. R. 7 All. 184

9. ———— "Ek jaddi." The wajib-ul-arz of a village gave a right of pre-emption in cases of sale to "brothers," and provided that, on refusal by a "brother" there should be a right of pre-emption in favour of co-sharers in the thoke who were related to the vendor by descent from a common ancestor ("hissadaran ek jaddi thoke"). It was also provided that, in the event of any dispute arising as to price, it should be settled by arbitration, and that, "if the co-sharers do not take at the amount fixed by the arbitrators, the co-sharers desiring to sell might make the transfer to a stranger." Held, that co-sharers who were not of common descent from the vendor were entitled to pre-emption after own brothers and co-sharers ek jaddi and to have preference over strangers. Guneshee Lal v. Zaraut Ali, 2 N. W. 343, followed. SABIR ALI v. YAD RAM . I. L. R. 9 All. 660

10. ———— "Pattidars"—"Chakdars." Held, that the terms of a wajib-ul-arz conferring a right of pre-emption upon "pattidars" did not apply to a chakdar holding a share in the same chak as the vendor. BALWANT SINGH v. SUBHAN ALI

11. ———— "Karibi," meaning of. The word "karibi" used by itself in the pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz to indicate shareholders "near" to the vendor, is ambiguous and inadequate to express the intentions of the shareholders. The pre-emptive clause in the wajib-ul-arz of a village gave a right of pre-emption, in cases of sale by shareholders, first to "bhai hakiki" (own brothers), next to "karibi" (near), and next to co-sharers in the same thoke as the vendor. Held, that, although the word "karibi" must be read in connection with the preceding word "bhai," the words "bhai karibi" could not reasonably be confined to cousins, but must be construed as meaning "bhai buand" or "bhai log," so as to include all near relatives, both male and female. Held, also, that a vendor's father's brother's widow, holding a share in the village absolutely and as heir of her deceased husband, was entitled to pre-emption in preference to the vendees, who were only sharers in the same thoke as the vendor. KHUMAN SINGH v. HARDAI

contd.

12. — Express limitation of operation of wajib-ul-arz—Time limited by agreement for pre-emption. When by the express terms of a wajib-ul-arz its operation is limited to the period of the settlement, a right of pre-emption created by it cannot be enforced after the expiry of that period, unless a provision has been made for that purpose, or the operation of the wajib-ul-arz has been extended by the agreement of the parties. RUTTUN SINGH v. OOMRAO SINGH . 4 N. W. 13

13. — Right of alienation—Express conditions. Held, that the conditions of the wajib-ul-arz do in no way confer on any person under disability a right of alienation which he does not otherwise enjoy. RADHEY PANDEY v. MUNSARAM . . . . . 2 Agra 85

14. — Condition that sharer's consent shall be obtained. Held, on the construction of the wajib-ul-arz, that the condition stipulating that alienations should be made with the consent of all the sharers, did not stipulate for the existence of pre-emption, and that the claim based on that was untenable. RAM PERSHAD SAHOO v. RUMZANEE . . . . . 2 Agra 37

15. — Right of pre-emption of co-sharer—Holder of resumed muafi—N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 62—Rules of the Board of Revenue, 1878, Department I, Rules 30 and 51. The plaintiff, a co-sharer in the village of Deobarampur, sued for pre-emption of certain land, being "resumed revenue-free land" in the village, which had been sold to a stranger. The clause of the wajib-ul-arz under which pre-emption was claimed was as follows: "When any co-sharer (hissadar) is bent upon selling or mortgaging his right (haqqiyat), then first that co-sharer who is nearest to the sharer bent on transfer can take it; after that any other person who is interested (sharik) in the village rank by rank can take it. If no person interested in the village takes it, then a stranger may take it. Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff had no right of pre-emption in respect of the land claimed by him, the vendor not being, within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz, a co-sharer in the village by virtue of his possession of a portion of the resumed muafi. KALLIAN MAL v. MADAN MOHAN . . . . . I. L. R. 17 All. 447

16. — Procedure of co-sharer who wishes to sell share. By the clause in a wajib-ul-arz which related to pre-emption it was provided as follows: When any co-sharer wishes to make a sale or mortgage of his share, it is incumbent on him to do so, first, in favour of a near co-sharer; next, in favour of a co-sharer of his thoke; and lastly, in favour of a co-sharer of another thoke, at the rate of R20 per bigha of cultivated land and R5 per bigha of waste land. If none of these take it, then

contd.

he may transfer it to an outsider. If any co-sharer (i.e., any co-sharer who wishes to sell or mortgage) fail to act as above directed, another co-sharer has the right of enforcing pre-emption in respect of the property. If the term of the mortgaged share of any co-sharer is about to expire and notice of foreclosure has been issued, and the co-sharer mortgagor has not the means to redeem, then another co-sharer, after paying up the money, may take back the share, and when the original mortgagor has the means, he after paying the money, may take possession of the share. Held, that, in the case of a conditional sale of property to which this wajib-ul-arz applied, there were only two stages contemplated by the wajib-ul-arz and not three. The first stage was at or about the time of the execution of the deed of conditional sale, and at that time pre-emption might be had by a co-sharer at the rate indicated in the wajib-ul-arz. The second stage was when the conditional vendee had brought his suit for foreclosure, and at that time the pre-emptor would have to pay the amount found to be due under the deed of conditional sale. When once, however, the order for foreclosure had been made absolute, the co-sharer's right of pre-emption was gone and extinguished. GYA BHARTHI v. LAHNATH RAI . I. L. R. 20 All. 103

17. — Co-sharers—Co-sharers in the Khalisa mahal distinguished from owners of separate plots of muafi lands in the mahal. The co-sharers in a mahal and the owners of a separate plot of muafi land included in the area of the mahal have, as a rule, no connection with one another, and it by no means follows that the custom adopted by or existing among the members of the khalisa co-partenary body would be applicable to the owners of the muafi plots. Strict evidence is always necessary to prove that the same custom is applicable to each. Kalyan Mal v. Madan Mohan, I. L. R. 17 All. 447, referred to. NARAIN DAS v. RAM SARAN DAS . I. L. R. 20 All. 419

18. — Agreement to offer property to co-sharers—Mode of offer. Where the terms of a wajib-ul-arz are that the property before sale to a stranger must be offered to the co-sharers, such offer must be made to each and every one of such co-sharers. DOWLUT v. NETRAM . 3 N. W. 42

19. — Preferential right of co-sharers—Right of refusal. Where the terms of wajib-ul-arz recognize the right of each sharer to sell without the consent of the others, but limit that right so far as to give preference or right of refusal to the co-sharers, the sale to a stranger can only be good and valid on proof of offer being made and refused by the co-sharers. PERMESHREE DOSS v. RAIKOONDUN SINGH . . . . . 3 Agra 3

20. — Usufructuary lease, construction of. Where the wajib-ul-arz provided that, in cases of transfer by "sale, etc.," the co-sharers would have a preferential right to the same:—Held, that the co-sharers were entitled to claim by right of pre-emption to take over an usufructuary lease which was made for the term of eight years. AHMED ALI KHAN v. AHMED

21. ———— Shareholders' right of—Relatives, right of—Strangers. One of the provisions in the wajib-ul-arz of a village was that, when a shareholder was desirous of selling his share, the right of purchase should lie first, with the real brother of the shareholder; secondly, with the nearest relatives; thirdly, with the shareholders in the thoke; and, lastly, with the shareholders in other thokes. Held, that, if a person was a near relative, he fulfilled all the conditions required, and there was no necessity that he should belong to the same thoke as the vendor. Held, also, where the parties were Mahomedans, that the wife of the vendor must be regarded as a near relative within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz, and that, though she was not a shareholder, she could not be considered a stranger, that is, a person who had no interest whatever in the family. MAHOMED TUKEE v. HUIJEE alias KHUJJAI. 5 N. W. 142

22. ———— Partition, effect of—Co-sharers—"Village"—Effect of perfect partition on covenants contained in the wajib-ul-arz. The wajib-ul-arz of a village contained a covenant among the co-sharers that, in the event of any one of them selling his share, a right of pre-emption should be enforceable, first, by a "near shareholder"; next by a partner in the thoke; and thirdly, by a partner in the village. The village was subsequently divided into three separate mehals by means of a perfect partition under the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873). Held, that the agreement regarding pre-emption remained in force after the partition. The term "village," as used in the wajib-ul-arz, means a definite area of land with houses upon it, and does not necessarily imply a joint ownership of such land, inasmuch as after partition there may remain some community of interest, and things held and used in common by all the inhabitants. Every one who lives in that area has a share in it, and may therefore be regarded as a "shareholder" within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz. GOKAL SINGH v. MANNU LAL. I. L. R. 7 All. 772

Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 191—No new wajib-ul-arz framed on partition—Pre-emption claimed under wajib-ul-arz of undivided mehal—Custom—Co-sharers—Hissadar deh.* Where, on the perfect partition of a mehal under the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act, 1873, no new wajib-ul-arz has been framed for any of the new mehals, the question whether or how far a contract or a custom of pre-emption recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of the undivided mehal is still in force, or who is entitled to claim the benefit of it, is not capable of any absolute or invariable answer. It depends in each case upon the proper construction of the terms of the particular contract or the proper interpretation of the particular custom recorded, assuming that there is no evidence of any intention on the part of the co-sharers at the time of partition to put an end to the contract or the custom. But there is a strong presumption against such claims for pre-emption when made after perfect partition by persons who are no longer co-sharers of the vendor; and where the language of the wajib-ul-arz is ambiguous, this presumption may be decisive. The wajib-ul-arz of a village forming one undivided mehal recorded a right of pre-emption by custom as existing in favour of "hissadaran deh" in cases of transfer by a "hissadar" of his share or "hissa" to a stranger. After a perfect partition, on which no new wajib-ul-arz was framed, and after a subsequent sale to a stranger of land in one of the new mehals, a person who, prior to the partition, was a co-sharer of the vendor in the undivided mehal, but who, since the partition, owned a share only in another of the new mehals, claimed pre-emption under the old wajib-ul-arz as a "hissadar deh." Held, by the Full Bench, upon the construction of the wajib-ul-arz, that he was not entitled to pre-emption. *DALGANJAN SINGH v. 24. ———— Division of lands in village—Right of sharer in one division to right of pre-emption of share in another division. The greater portion of the lands of a certain village were divided into thokes, each thoke comprising a certain amount of land, and the rest of the lands were held in common according to the interest of the co-sharers in the village. The wajib-ul-arz contained the following provision regarding the right of pre-emption: "Each sharer is by all means at liberty to transfer his right and share, but first of all the transfer should be effected by him in favour of his own brothers and nephews who may be sharers, and, in case of their refusal, in favour of the other owners of the thoke." Held, in a suit by a sharer in one thoke to enforce a right of pre-emption, under the wajib-ul-arz, in respect of a share in another thoke, that the fact that the plaintiff in common with all the sharers of the different thokes was a sharer in the common lands did not make her a sharer in the vendor's thoke, and she had therefore no right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-arz. *MAYA RAM v. 25. ———— Nearer co-sharer—Mortgage by conditional sale—Limitation—Acquiescence—Equitable estoppel. The two joint owners of a 2 annas 8 pies share in a village jointly executed two deeds of mortgage by conditional sale, each for a share of 1 anna 4 pies, in favour, respectively, of R and A, co-sharers in the village, and related to the vendors. In 1875 the conditional sale in favour of R became absolute, and he was recorded as proprietor of half the share of the vendors, and obtained possession thereof. In 1882 A foreclosed his mortgage and obtained possession of the other half share. R thereupon claimed the right to purchase the half share so acquired by A on the allegation that he had a right of pre-emption in respect thereof, having become the vendee in 1875 of the other half share, and therefore being the "nearer co-sharer" of the vendors within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz, and also being nearer in relationship to the vendors than A. The wajib-ul-arz provided that each co-sharer was competent to transfer his own share, but that, when making a transfer, it was incumbent on him to notify the same to his near co-sharer, and, on his refusal, to other sharers in the village. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was estopped from preferring a claim to pre-emption on the ground that he had acquiesced in the conditional sale in favour of the defendant, and also that he had no right to pre-emption under the wajib-ul-arz. Held, that, inasmuch as from 1875 to 1882 the only owners of the 2 annas 8 pies share were the plaintiff and the mortgagors, they were the only co-sharers in respect of this particular share, although there were other co-sharers in the village; that the plaintiff must therefore be regarded as a "nearer co-sharer" of the vendors than the defendant within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz, and that as such he was entitled to claim pre-emption. Held, also, that the right of pre-emption which arose upon the sale was a new right, and not the same as that which arose at the time of the mortgage, inasmuch as the wajib-ul-arz distinctly contemplated the right of pre-emption as arising upon the two different events of mortgage and sale; that the alleged acquiescence of the plaintiff pre-emptor therefore occurred at a time when the right claimed by him was not yet in existence; and that consequently the claim was not barred. *RUP NARAIN v. 26. ——— "Stranger"—Effect of joining stranger as co-vendee. Under the terms of a wajib-ul-arz, successive pre-emptive rights were given, first, to "own brothers"; secondly, to "near cousins"; thirdly, to "shareholders." Held (BURKITT, J.), the parties being Mahomedans, that in regard to a sale of land to which this wajib-ul-arz applied, a nephew (brother's son) of the vendee was a "stranger," and his joinder as co-vendee would vitiate the sale and let it in other persons having a right of pre-emption. *Bhurey Mal v. (haqiqat), his partners should have a right to purchase at the same price (qimat) as the vendee had given. One of the co-sharers transferred to a stranger 1 biswa and 6 dhurs of a grove or garden in exchange for another piece of land. Held, by the Full Bench, that this transaction was a transfer of haqiqat within the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. Held, also, that the plot of land which was given in exchange for the 1 biswa and 6 dhurs must be considered as a price (qimat) within the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the word "qimat" must be interpreted in the sense given to it by the Mahomedan law, including not only money, but other kinds of property capable of being valued at a definite sum of money, and covering the consideration of "sale" as well of exchange as defined in ss. 54 and 118 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), respectively. NIAMAT ALI v. ASMAT BIBI . I. L. R. 7 All. 626

28. ——— Simple mortgage—"Transfer"—Mortgage—Charge—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58. The wajib-ul-arz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers on a transfer (intikal) by sale or mortgage (rahn) by a co-sharer of "rights and interests" (hakkiyat). Per PETHERAM, C.J.—That as a simple mortgage, as defined in s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, by giving a right to sell, transfers an interest in the property mortgaged, a simple mortgage of his share by a co-sharer created a right of pre-emption under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The circumstance that possession had not been transferred to the mortgagee was one which had no bearing on the question whether a right of pre-emption arose under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz in the case of a simple mortgage. The word "intikal" as used in Hindustani, has the broadest meaning in connection with "alienation," "conveyance," "assignment" or "transfer" of rights in immoveable property. The word "hakkiyat" means rights and interests in the legal sense of the phrase. The word "rahn" is a generic word indicating all that is included in the English word "mortgage" and is not limited to usufructuary mortgages, but includes simple mortgages also. When general words are used in a document, they must be understood in a general sense, unless they are accompanied by any expression limiting or restricting their ordinary meaning, or unless such limitation or restriction arises from necessary implication. The words "intikal," "hakkiyat" and "rahn" in the wajib-ul-arz could be understood only in the most general sense. "Mortgage" as understood in Indian law, includes simple mortgage as well as usufructuary, and one is as much a "transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property" as the other. A simple mortgage is a "transfer," being the transfer of the right of sale. Held, therefore, by MAHMOOD, J., that a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz in the case of a simple mortgage by a co-sharer of his share to a "stranger." Per BRODHURST, J., that one of the entries in a statement showing the transfers which had taken place in the village at or about the time the wajib-ul-arz was framed, which statement was connected with the wajib-ul-arz, related to a simple mortgage, from which it appeared that it was the intention that the co-sharers should have the right of pre-emption in all cases of mortgage, whether usufructuary or otherwise, and therefore a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz in the case of a simple mortgage. Per DUTHOIT, J., that a pre-emptive right was raised by the terms of the wajib-ul-arz only upon the occurrence of a transfer of a share in the property of the mehal, and a simple mortgage was not a transfer of property. OLDFIELD, J.—The word “transfer” used in the wajib-ul-arz was not intended to refer to a simple mortgage, but to mortgages where possession of the property passes to the mortgagee. SHEORATAN KUAR v. MAHIPAL KUAR. . . I. L. R. 7 All. 258

29. ——— Mortgage by conditional sale—“Transfer”—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58. A clause in the wajib-ul-arz of a village gave a right of pre-emption in respect of “transfer” by the sharers of their rights and interests by sale and mortgage. Held, that a deed of conditional sale of a share in the village, which did not transfer possession, was a transfer of an interest in the village, and was sufficient to let in the right of pre-emption. Sheoratan Kuar v. 31. ——— Sale without registration of transfer—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Fraudulent omission to transfer by registered instrument. The wajib-ul-arz of a village gave the co-sharers a right of pre-emption in cases where any one of them should wish to “transfer his share wholly or partly by sale or mortgage.” One of the co-sharers entered into a transaction by which he transferred the possession of his share to a stranger for R300 and had mutation of names effected in the Revenue Department, but, in order to avoid the right of pre-emption, the parties omitted to execute or register a deed of sale in respect of the transfer. Held, by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J. dissenting), that the transaction gave rise to the right of pre-emption within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz. Per PETHERAM, C.J., that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz meant that, if any cosharer transferred his right wholly or partly, the right of pre-emption should arise; that although the legal interest in the share was never transferred, the effect of the transaction in question was to transfer absolutely the whole right of possession from the vendor to the vendee, and that it was therefore such a transfer as let in the right of pre-emption. Per STRAIGHT, J., that, inasmuch as the defendants deliberately omitted to observe the necessary legal formality of a registered instrument with the object of defeating the pre-emptive right, it was very doubtful whether a Court of equity would be justified in allowing them to set up, and in giving effect to a defence based upon their own intentional evasion of the law. Per OLDFIELD and BRODHURST, JJ., that the failure of the parties to the transfer to comply with the requirements of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) as to the manner in which the transfer should be made did not alter the nature of the transaction or affect the fact that a sale had been made and could not affect a pre-emptor's right in respect of it. Per MAHMOOD, J., that a valid and perfected sale was a condition precedent to the exercise of the pre-emptive right; that in the present case nothing had happened which could properly be termed a “sale” within the meaning of the wajib-ul-arz; that the application for mutation of names not having been registered, the provisions of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act prevented it from taking effect as a sale, or passing the ownership from the vendor to the vendee; and that therefore, under the wajib-ul-arz, the right of pre-emption could not arise. JANKI v. 32. ——— Calculation of price, mode of—Proportionate share of purchase-money. The wajib-ul-arz of a village contained this clause regarding the transfer of shares by sale or mortgage, viz., “Whenever a shareholder intends to transfer his rights, his nearest co-sharer shall be first entitled to purchase the same, and on his refusal the other sharers in the thoke, and on their refusal sharers in other thokes will be entitled.” S, the proprietor of a 4 pies share in one thoke and of a 9 pies share in another thoke, sold both shares, together with a bungalow, garden, and factory situated on the land comprised in the 4 pies share, for R10,000 to T and others, shareholders in the thoke containing the 9 pies share. D and others, shareholders in the thoke containing the 4 pies share, sued to obtain possession of that share and the bungalow, garden, and factory, claiming the right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-arz, on payment of a proportionate part of the purchase-money, which they estimated at four-thirteenths of that sum, calculating the numbers of pies sold. It was held (in accordance with the opinion of the Full Bench), that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim the right of pre-emption in respect of the 4 pies share to the exclusion of the 9 pies. It was also held that the right of pre-emption did not extend to the bungalow, garden, and factory. Instead of adopting the plaintiffs' mode of

34. — “Ekjaddi”—Wajib-ul-arz—Interpretation of document—Meaning of the term “ekjaddi.” Held, that the term “ekjaddi,” used in the pre-emption clause of a wajib-ul-arz signifies persons descended from a common ancestor through the male line. Guneshee Lal v. Pheku, All. Weekly Notes (1895) 9, and Ilahi Bakhsh v. Ghulam Abbas, All. Weekly Notes (1898) 15, referred to. SHEOBALAK SINGH v. LACHMIDHAR (1901) . I. L. R. 23 All. 427

36. — “Hissadaran shikmi”—Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Meaning of the term “hissadaran shikmi.” Held, that the expression “hissadaran shikmi,” as used in the clauses of a wajib-ul-arz dealing with various classes of persons who were entitled to pre-emption in preference to strangers, did not necessarily imply any idea of subordination, but was rightly considered applicable to persons who were co-sharers in the particular khattu of the patti in which the land was situated. *ABDUL SHAKUR v. 37. — Mortgage—Mortgage by conditional sale—Accrual of right of pre-emption when sale becomes absolute—Wajib-ul-arz—Partition of mahal. The wajib-ul-arz, framed in 1883, of an undivided mahal consisting of several villages contained the following provision as to pre-emption:—“Should

“a sharer of any patti sell his share, he will sell it, first, to subordinate sharers; if they refuse to take it, then to sharers in the patti; and, if they also do not take it, then to proprietors of the mahal; and, in case of refusal by all the sharers before mentioned, he shall have power to transfer it to a stranger.” While this wajib-ul-arz was in force, namely, in 1890, certain property, to which its provisions applied, was mortgaged by a deed of conditional sale. In 1894, after partition of the mahal, a new wajib-ul-arz was framed for the mahal in which the mortgaged property was situated, which also contained a similar record of the custom of pre-emption, in the following terms:—“Should a sharer sell his share, he will sell it, first, to his subordinate sharers, afterwards to a sharer in the mahal, and, in case of refusal by the sharer in the mahal, to a sharer in the old mahal.” Held, that, the record as to the right of pre-emption being in both cases the record of a custom, and the provisions of the latter wajib-ul-arz being capable of application to the circumstances of the case, a right of pre-emption accrued to the shareholders in one of the other mahals into which the original mahal had been divided, upon the mortgage by conditional sale becoming an absolute sale in favour of a stranger. *Alu Prasad v. 38. — Construction of document—Wajib-ul-arz—Letters Patent, ss. 10 and 27—Difference of opinion between members of Bench hearing an appeal from a single Judge of the Court—Civil Procedure Code, s. 575. Where the words of the pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz ran in the form: “If any co-sharer desires to sell or mortgage, etc., let him sell first to so-and-so, and then to so-and-so.” It was held by STANLEY, C.J., that the use of the imperative mood did not indicate a fresh contract between the co-sharers, but was consistent with the clause being a record of pre-existing custom. Where there is nothing to show clearly that such a clause embodies a new contract as to pre-emption, the rule of construction is that it is a record of a custom. Majidan Bibi v. Hayatan, All. Held, that this did not mean that the right of pre-emption arose only in the case of a sale to a stranger, but that each class of pre-emptors was to have a preferential right of pre-emption as against persons belonging to the next following class, if the latter happen to be the purchasers. *SUKHDEO SINGH v. After the death of the grantee the sir land came into the possession of the son of Lal Singh, who sold a portion of it. Construction of document—Evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Effect, if any, of omission of an entry from a public document—Rules of the Board of Revenue for the settlement of Gorakhpur and Basti districts (Board's Circulars, 1890, 8—1, s. 38)—Meaning of the word "nadarad." The plaintiff claimed a right of pre-emption in respect of a share in a certain mauza situated in the district of Gorakhpur. He relied principally on a wajib-ul-arz of the year 1866, as affording evidence of a custom of pre-emption prevailing in the village. The defendants contended that the wajib-ul-arz of 1866 was evidence only of a contract, and not of a custom, and further put forward the "memorandum of village customs" prepared at the Settlement of 1886-87, as showing that the right of pre-emption, whether by custom or contract, no longer existed. The wajib-ul-arz of 1866 contained the following provision as to the right of pre-emption: "Every co-sharer is entitled to transfer by sale or mortgage, but the condition of his doing so is, that he who wants to transfer do so, firstly, in favour of near co-sharers; secondly, in favour of other co-sharers of the thok; and, thirdly, in favour of strangers." The memorandum of village customs prepared at the Settlement of 1886-87 was prepared under rules framed by the Board of Revenue for the Settlement of the districts of Gorakhpur and Basti. The portion of those rules material to the present case is as follows:—"A memorandum of the village customs will be appended to each khewat by the Assistant Settlement Officer when he verifies the jamabandi, and it will take the place of the document hitherto known as the wajib-ul-arz."

... "In regard to any custom or constitution peculiar to the mahal, the following matters should be noted [class (d), s. 25]; (a) pre-emption (as regards mahals which belong to other than Mahomedan proprietors), when the proprietors expressly demand that it may be noted, and prove conclusively that the custom exists." In the memorandum of the village customs prepared at the Settlement of 1886-87 the only entry as to pre-emption was the word "nadarad." Held, that, as regards the wajib-ul-arz of 1866, in the absence of any evidence showing that the right of pre-emption arose by agreement or contract, it must be taken that the right recorded was customary right. *Majidan Bibi v. of the disuse or abrogation of the custom or contract of pre-emption, it was held that the word "nadarad" itself did not, in the absence of any evidence showing that, as a matter of fact, the custom has ceased to exist, mean that the custom of pre-emption no longer subsisted, but was of no more value than if the memorandum of village customs had been completely silent on the subject; and it could not be inferred from such an entry alone that the custom had fallen into disuse or ceased to exist. Sadhu Sahu v. Raja Ram, I. L. R. 16 All. 40, referred to. Ram Lagan v. Ram Ugrah, All. Weekly Notes (1901) 29; Gajadhar Pandey v. Hulas, S. A. No. 198 of 1900, decided 14th Dec. 1900; and Kodai Sahu v. Mahabir, S. A. No. 342 of 1900, decided 7th Jan. 1901, overruled. Even if the word "nadarad" had the meaning contended for, and signified that the right of pre-emption no longer existed, it was an entry which it was in excess of the duties prescribed for Settlement Officers in the district in question to make, and therefore no evidential value whatever could be attached to it. In the matter of Juggun Lall, 7 C. L. R. 356, and Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerjee, I. L. R. 10 Calc. 1024, referred to. The cases of Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh, I. L. 44. Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Mahomedan law—"Intiqal." Where in a wajib-ul-arz it was recorded merely that "the custom of pre-emption prevails," it was held that in the absence of any special custom different from or not co-extensive with the Mahomedan law of pre-emption, the Mahomedan law must be applied. Ram Prasad v. Abdul Karim, I. L. R. 9 All. 513, followed. The term "intiqal" occurring in the pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz covers all kinds of transfers, mortgages as well as sales. JAGDAM SAHAI v. MAHABIR PRASAD (1905)

45. Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Partition of village into separate mahals. In a village which consisted of two patti or mahals the wajib-ul-arz recorded a custom of pre-emption to the effect that in the case of a sale or mortgage by a shareholder a claim for pre-emption might be brought by (i) own brothers and nephews, (ii) cousins who are co-sharers, (iii) co-sharers in the patti, and (iv) share-holders in the village (hissadaran deh). The village was subsequently divided into more mahals: but no new wajib-ul-arz was framed:—Held, that a co-sharer in the village had a right of pre-emption as against a stranger, even though he did not own a share in the mahal, in which the property sold was situate. Dalghanjan Singh v. Kalka Singh, I. L. R. 22 All. 1, referred to. JANKI v. RAM PARTAB SINGH (1905)

46. Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—"Qimat." Held, that the word "qimat" as used in the pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz is wide enough to include the consideration given for a usufructuary mortgage with possession as well as for a sale. HULAS RAI v. RAM PRASAD (1906) . I. L. R. 28 All. 454

47. Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Retention of same wajib-ul-arz after division of village into mahals—Hissadaran deh and hissadaran patti on the same footing. Where a village was divided into three mahals and the new wajib-ul-arz, which was prepared for one of them A M was copied verbatim from the wajib-ul-arz of the village before division and clearly put hissadaran deh and hissadaran patti on the same footing:—Held, that a co-sharer in the mahal A M had no right of pre-emption in regard to property sold in A M as against a co-sharer who, though he had no share in the mahal A M, was a co-sharer in one of the other mahals. Dalghanjan Singh v. Kalka Singh, I. L. R. 22 All. 1, distinguished. SARDAR SINGH v. IJAZ HUSAIN KHAN (1906)

48. Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document. The pre-emptive clause of a wajib-ul-arz was drawn up in the following terms:—"In case of great necessity each co-sharer is entitled to transfer his property as recorded in the khevat, and the near co-sharers and the pattidars can claim a pre-emptive right; but out of them the one, who is nearer, will have a prior right to do so." Held, that the right of pre-emption only arose on a sale to a stranger. If the sale was to a co-sharer no right of suit accrued to a nearer co-sharer. JAI DAT v. RAM BADAL (1905) . I. L. R. 28 All. 168

49. Custom—Wajib-ul-arz—Construction of document—Custom or contract. In a suit for pre-emption two wajib-ul-arz were relied upon. The earlier wajib-ul-arz of the year 1864 provided that "if a sharer desires to transfer his share, the first right of pre-emption is possessed by his near brother, next by the sharers in the patti and next by sharers in other patti, and when all these have declined to take a transfer the sharer may sell to any one he likes." The later wajib-ul-arz of the year 1884 under the head, "custom as to pre-emption" provided that "no such case has as yet occurred: but we acknowledge the right of pre-emption." Held, that the wajib-ul-arz of 1864 was evidence of the existence of a right existing by custom and the provision in the latter was a recognition by the parties of the custom prevailing under the earlier wajib-ul-arz. Ram Din v. Pokhar Singh, I. L. R. 27 All. 553, followed. DAULAT v. MATHURA (1906) . I. L. R. 28 All. 456 ul-arz of 1833 made no mention of the right and subsequent wajib-ul-arz of 1863 referred to the right of pre-emption in the following terms:—"In future every one would be entitled to transfer, etc.," but the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the settlement of 1890 was silent as to any right of pre-emption existing in the village: Held, that the record of 1863 was one of custom and that the silence of the record-of-rights of the latest settlement in respect to pre-emption was not a silence from which any inference opposed to the existence of the right of pre-emption could be drawn, inasmuch as the rules framed for the settlement of the district under s. 257 of Act No. XIX of 1873 did not require the Settlement Officer to put on record any custom of pre-emption. *Tota v. 1. ——— Apportionment of purchase-money, illegality of. A person claiming to exercise his right of pre-emption must take the bargain as it was made. Any apportionment of the purchase-money is altogether illegal. MADHUB CHUNDER NATH BISWAS v. TOMEE BEWAH . . . 7 W. R. 210

2. ——— Dispute as to price—Arrangement between vendor and vendee. In a suit to establish a right of pre-emption to property which had been sold, in which the plaintiff alleged that the actual value was different from that which was recited in the deed of sale between the defendants, the vendor and vendee:—Held, that plaintiff was entitled to have the property at the price agreed upon between the vendor and the vendee, but not to the benefit of an arrangement by which a portion of the price had been allowed to remain in the hands of the vendee that he might pay off a mortgage-debt. GOLAM AYHYA v. JOY MUNGUL SINGH . . . 13 W. R. 435

3. ——— Rights of pre-emptor—Sale contract—Deduction of amount recovered by vendee. A pre-emptor is entitled to all the benefit which the vendee takes under the contract of sale. Held, therefore, where a certain sum was fixed as the price of the property, and such sum was paid by the vendee, but it was subsequently agreed between him and the vendor, as part of the sale-contract, that the vendee should recover for his own benefit certain moneys due to the vendor at the time of the sale, and the vendee recovered such moneys, that the pre-emptor was entitled to a deduction of the amount of such moneys from the sum originally fixed as the price of the property. *TAJAMMUL HUSAIN v. of the sale, and obtained a decree. M, claiming 1 anna 4 pies of the share as his property, sued the vendors and purchasers of the share and G for such 1 anna 4 pies, and obtained a decree. He then sued the same parties to enforce his right of pre-emption in respect of the remainder of the share, that is, 6 annas 8 pies, claiming to pay only a proportionate amount of the price paid for the whole share. Held, that M was not bound to pay the price paid for the whole share but only the proportionate amount of such price. MUHAMMAD LATIF v. GOBIND SINGH . . . I. L. R. 5 All. 382

5. ——— Amount of purchase-money—Mortgage by conditional sale—Reg. XVII of 1806, s. 8—Foreclosure. Held, that a proceeding under Regulation XVII of 1806 foreclosing a mortgage by conditional sale was not conclusive as to the amount of the mortgage-money against persons subsequently claiming to enforce a right of pre-emption and raising the question as to the amount of the purchase-money. Forbes v. Ameeroonnissa Begum, 10 Moo. I. A. 340, referred to. Also that on general principles, a decree in a suit to foreclose a mortgage by conditional sale cannot bind a person not a party to the suit claiming to enforce a right of pre-emption and raising a similar question. Held, also, that a person claiming a right of pre-emption in respect of a mortgage by conditional sale was bound to pay as the price of the property the entire amount due on such mortgage at the time it became absolute. Ashik Ali v. Mathura Kandu, I. L. R. 5 All. 187, followed. TAWAKHUL RAI v. LACHMAN RAI. TAWAKHUL RAI v. SHEO GHULAM . . . I. L. R. 6 All. 341

6. ——— Arrangement between vendor and vendee as to payment of purchase money—Right of pre-emptor to stand in the position of the purchaser. A co-sharer of a village sold part of his share to a stranger. This sale was subject to a right of pre-emption created by the wajib-ul-arz in favour of the partners of the vendor. Only a part of the purchase-money was paid in cash, it being agreed that the balance should remain on credit and be secured by two deeds in which the property was hypothecated by the purchaser to the vendor. Held, that it could not be said that the partners of the vendor had not only the right of pre-emption, but also the right to be put in the same position with reference to all the peculiar incidents of the payment of the purchase-money as that arranged between the vendor and purchaser. NIHAL SINGH v. KOKALE SINGH . . . I. L. R. 8 All. 29

7. ——— Concealment by vendor and vendee of actual price—Evidence—Market value. In suits for pre-emption, where the Court has come to the conclusion that the price alleged in the deed of sale is not the true contract price, and where it cannot ascertain the true price by reason either that the vendor and vendee refuse to disclose the same by their own evidence or their evidence cannot be believed, the Court should ascertain, if possible, what was the market price of the property in dispute at the time of the sale, and accept that market price as the probable price agreed upon between the parties. It is for the plaintiff either to show what was the actual contract price or to give substantial evidence on which the Court can act, showing what was the market value at the time of the sale. AGAR SINGH v. RAGHURAJ SINGH. I. L. R. 9 All. 471

8. ———— Clause in wajib-ul-arz fixing price in case of sale to a co-sharer—Vendor and purchaser—Sale to a stranger for higher price—Agreement running with land—Pre-emptor entitled to take property on payment of price fixed in wajib-ul-arz—Purchaser entitled to recover purchase-money. The wajib-ul-arz of a village contained a provision that any co-sharer desiring to sell his share should offer it to the other co-sharers before selling it to a stranger, and further that, in case of sale to co-sharer, the price to be paid should be calculated in proportion to the price for which a particular share had been sold in 1860. One of the co-sharers without first offering his share to the other co-sharers, sold it to a stranger, for a price higher than that which would be payable according to the above-mentioned provision. A suit for pre-emption was brought by a co-sharer against the vendor and the purchaser, and the plaintiff claimed the benefit of the sale upon payment of a sum calculated according to the condition of the wajib-ul-arz relating to sales between co-sharers. Held, by the Full Bench, that the condition of the wajib-ul-arz regarding the price to be paid for the share was still binding on the land, notwithstanding the sale; that a co-sharer was entitled to purchase the share at the price agreed before it could be sold to anyone else, and in case of sale to a stranger could call on the vendor and the purchaser to hand it over on payment of such price; and that, if the stranger vendee had paid more than was payable according to the wajib-ul-arz, he was entitled to recover it from the vendor. *Akbar Singh v. 9. ———— Agreement running with the land—Pre-emptor entitled to take property on payment of price fixed in wajib-ul-arz. The pre-emptive clause in the wajib-ul-arz of a village contained a provision that the right of pre-emption could be enforced on payment of such sum as would represent the "kimat-i-murav vajah," that is according to current rates. A suit for pre-emption was brought against the vendor and vendee of a certain fractional share in the village, and the plaintiff claiming the benefit of the above provision disputed the price entered in the sale-deed as the proper price for the share according to current rates. Held, following Karim Baksh Khan v. Phula Bibi, I. L. R. 8 All. 102, that a co-sharer was entitled to purchase the share sold at a price to be ascertained according to the rule in that behalf contained in the wajib-ul-arz, and the condition in the wajib-ul-arz regarding the price to be paid for the share sold was binding on the land and therefore binding on the stranger vendee. UPMANI KUAR v. RAM DIN

10. ———— Application for refund of money paid into Court by a successful plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption, the decree having been set aside on appeal—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 583—Interest. A plaintiff in a pre-emption suit obtained a decree and paid into Court the pre-emptive price as stated in that decree, and the money was drawn out of Court by the vendor. Subsequently the decree was reversed on appeal, and the plaintiff then applied under s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for a refund of the money paid into Court as above described with interest. Held, that the pre-emptor was entitled to a refund of the money together with interest up to date of repayment. *Rogers v. 11. ———— Decreed pre-emptive price paid into Court by pre-emptor—Subsequent partial withdrawal by a creditor of the decree-holder of the money so paid in. The holder of a decree for pre-emption paid the decreed pre-emptive price into Court. A creditor of the decree-holder applied for attachment of the money so paid in, and ultimately was allowed by the Court to withdraw a portion of it. After the decree for pre-emption had been confirmed in appeal, the pre-emptor applied for possession of the pre-empted property. Held, that the decree-holder was entitled to obtain possession, and that it was not competent to the Court to pay out to any one but the person entitled to it under the decree for pre-emption any portion of the pre-emptive price, so long as the decree for pre-emption was not modified or reversed in appeal. ABDUS SALAM v. WILAYAT ALI KHAN. I. L. R. 19 All. 256

12. ———— Calculation of price—Covenant for pre-emption, Breach of—Suit to enforce covenant. Four brothers, on making a partition of their joint property, covenanted with each other that if any one of them, or their heirs, had to sell his share, he should offer to sell the same to one of the co-sharers. One of the brothers having died, his widow sold his share which she had inherited without such an offer to the surviving brothers, who thereupon sued her and her vendee for possession upon payment of what they alleged to be the value of the property (viz., R27). The Munsif found the value to be greater (viz., R95), and set aside the sale without giving possession. The lower Appellate Court made an order that, if plaintiffs deposited R95 in Court, their appeal would be decreed. The plaintiffs deposited the amount, and a decree for possession was given them. Held, that neither of the Courts had the power to make the decrees which they did; and the order of the lower Appellate Court to deposit the money was not binding on the plaintiffs, who had no right under their contract to an election, after the value had been ascertained whether they would purchase at that price or not. Quære: Can a perpetual covenant as to the disposition of land be enforced? TRIPOORA SOONDUREE v. JUGGERNATH DUTT . . . 24 W. R. 321

13. Conditional decree—*Appeal
—Costs—Civil Procedure Code, 1852, ss. 214, 583. A Court of first instance decreed a claim for pre-emption conditionally, on the pre-emptor paying into Court R125 within a specified period, and also awarded the pre-emptor R39-9-0 as his costs in the suit. Within the specified period the pre-emptor paid into Court the R125, and subsequently executed his decree for costs, by drawing out therefrom the R39-9-0. After this, the decree was modified on appeal, the Appellate Court raising the R125 payable as the condition of pre-emption to R200, and reversing the first Court's order as to costs. Within the period specified in the Appellate Court's decree, the pre-emptor paid into Court the further sum of R75. Subsequently the vendee, defendant, applied to the Court under s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the property in suit restored to him, contending that the pre-emptor had failed to pay the full R200 within the prescribed period. Held by STRAIGHT, J., affirming the judgment of MAHMOOD, J., that this contention must fail; that the payment of R125 due under the first Court's decree could not be said to have been reduced by the pre-emptor subsequently executing against the amount so paid the order of that Court in his favour for costs, and that the subsequent payment of R75 within the period prescribed by the Appellate Court satisfied the requirements of that Court's decree, subject to the judgment-debtor's right to recover the costs realized in execution of the first Court's decree. Held, by TYRRELL, J. (contra), that, although the pre-emptor had once made a payment, which for a few days was a compliance with the first Court's decree, such compliance became immaterial when that decree was modified on appeal, and as he had never had in any Court a credit for R200 as required by the Appellate Court's decree which alone was the decree in the cause, he had failed to fulfil the condition essential to pre-emption, and therefore the defendant's application should be allowed. BALMUKAND v. PANCHAM

14. Mortgage—Mortgage-money fraudulently over-stated—Claim of pre-emptor decreed at a lower figure—Suit by mortgagees against mortgagor, to recover the difference. Din Bandhu mortgaged to Sheodihal and others certain property, and the mortgagor and the mortgagees, for purposes of their own, fraudulently agreed to overstate the consideration for the mortgage. One Shuhrat Singh then brought a pre-emption suit against the parties to the mortgage, and obtained a decree, which allowed him to take over the rights of the mortgagees upon payment of a sum much less than the consideration stated in the bond, which was found by the Court to have been largely fictitious. The mortgagees, after the success of Shuhrat Singh's suit, sued the representatives of the mortgagor to recover from them the difference between the price paid by Shuhrat Singh and the consideration mentioned in the deed of mortgage. They based their suit mainly upon a stipulation in the deed, to the effect that, if the mortgage money due to the mortgagees was in any way jeopardized, the mortgagees would be entitled to realize it with interest at 9 per cent per annum, and partly upon general grounds of equity. Held, that from no point of view were the plaintiffs entitled to succeed. The stipulations in the bond above referred to enured to the benefit of the pre-emptor, and, since the plaintiffs had joined with the defendants in misrepresenting the amount of the consideration for the mortgage, they could not be allowed to take advantage of their own wrong. BALBHADDAR NATH v. SHEODIHAL (1902)

I. L. R. 24 All. 514

15. Set-off—Decree in pre-emption suit—Payment into Court—Costs. A judgment, dated the 24th September 1904, in favour of the pre-emptors under a foreclosure decree directed payment within two months of R2,100, together with the costs, if any, incurred by the purchaser in obtaining the order absolute. The corresponding decree contained the words, "together with the costs of the purchaser in the foreclosure case, if any." The decree also awarded the plaintiffs a sum of R117-4-0 as costs. The R2,100 was paid within the time fixed. On the 24th February, 1905, the judgment-debtors claimed that they were entitled to be restored to possession and that the suit must be deemed to have been dismissed, inasmuch as the costs, amounting to R25-12-0, of the proceedings relative to the order absolute had not been deposited. Held, following Ishri v. Gopal Saran, I. L. R. 6 All. 351, that the R117-4-0 could be set off against the R25-12-0; that the R2,100 deposited was therefore in excess of the actual sum payable under the decree; and that the judgment-debtors' claim failed. Jaggar Nath Pande v. Joku Tewari, I. L. R. 18 All. 223, referred to. PARMANAND RAOT v. GOBARDHAN SAHAI (1906) . . . I. L. R. 28 All. 676

16. Fictitious price—Price stated in sale-deed alleged to be fictitious—Burden of proof. When a plaintiff pre-emptor comes into Court alleging that the price entered in the sale-deed is fictitious, it rests on him to give some prima facie evidence that this is the case. But comparatively slight evidence is sufficient for such purpose, and it will then be for the parties to the sale to show that the price alleged to have been paid was actually paid. Bhagwan Singh v. Mahabir Singh, I. L. R. 5 All. 184, Sheo Pargash Dube v. Dhanraj Dube, I. L. R. 9 All. 225, and Agar Singh v. Raghuraj Singh, I. L. R. 29 All. 471, referred to. *O'Connor v. Ghulam Haidar, I. L. ## 5. PROFITS OF LAND.

1. ———— Lambardar collecting rents for co-sharer—Right of suit by pre-emptor to recover profits accruing between the date of his decree and the time when he obtained mutation of names—Principal and agent. Held, that a pre-emptor who had obtained a decree for pre-emption in respect of a share in a pure zemindari village could not successfully maintain a suit against the judgment-debtor co-sharer for the profits of the pre-empted share accruing between the date of the original decree and the date of his obtaining mutation of names, such profits having been collected by the lambardar, but not paid over to the judgment-debtor; inasmuch as neither could the lambardar be considered as an agent of the co-sharer, whose possession of the profits was the possession of his principal, nor was there any obligation on the co-sharer to collect the profits and hold them to the use of the plaintiff. SRI KISHEN LAL v. ATMA RAM

2. ———— Annual profits—One total price for ten villages—Ten separate conveyances having a separate price for each village—Government revenue—Amount to be paid on pre-emption. Where A agreed to buy from B ten villages for one total price, but by subsequent agreement between A and B ten separate conveyances were executed showing ten separate prices:—Held, in a suit for pre-emption that if it was proved that the consideration mentioned in the sale-deeds had been paid and received, the Court should not look further and ascertain the value of the property in suit by a consideration of the annual profits or of the amount of Government revenue. O'CONNOR v. GHULAM HAIDAR (1906) . I. L. R. 28 All. 617

6. LOSS OR WAIVER OF RIGHT.

1. ———— Refusal to purchase—Conditional decree. Held, that the plaintiff, having refused to purchase at the sum actually given, could not come into Court and ask for a conditional decree, which is given in cases where a higher price than was actually paid has been alleged to have been paid to the prejudice of the pre-emptor. KUDHARA v. KHUMAN SINGH . . . . . 1 Agra 265

2. ———— Bona fide belief that price stated is in excess of real price. A person having a right of pre-emption does not lose it by refusing to purchase the property at the price at which it is offered to him, because he believes that such price is in excess of the real price, where such belief is entertained and expressed in good faith. LAJJA PRASAD v. DEBI PRASAD

3. ———— Effect of imperfect partition on right of pre-emption. Where there is imperfect partition,—viz., where the land is divided, but the joint liability to the Government remains, and the property is not made into separate mehals,—the right of pre-emption is not lost. RAM PERSHAD v. PRE-EMPTION—*contd.*6. LOSS OR WAIVER OF RIGHT—contd.

4. ———— Pre-emptor opposing mutation of names—Effect of such opposition on right of pre-emption. Held, that a pre-emptor is not precluded from claiming the property by right of pre-emption because he opposed the mutation of names only on the ground that the vendor was not in possession. PEERA v. SHIMBHOO . 2 Agra 348

5. ———— Insertion of names of purchaser's sons in deed of sale, effect of—Absence of intention to defraud. Held, that a preferential right to purchase is not lost merely by the inclusion of the names of the sons of the purchaser in the sale-deed, if it be proved that the actual purchaser was the father, and the names of the sons were included in accordance with the prevailing usage, without any intention to defraud the other co-sharers. DOWLAT SINGH v. 6. ———— Re-sale—Effect of re-sale on right of pre-emption. A re-sale cannot destroy the right of pre-emption in a property, the sale of which is admitted by the vendor. PUTTOOARAM v. SHAM LALL SAHOO . . . . . 7 W. R. 208

7. ———— Acquiescence in mortgage by conditional sale—Relinquishment. Acquiescence in a mortgage by conditional sale does not involve relinquishment of the right of pre-emption upon the conditional sale eventually becoming absolute. AJAIB NATH v. MATHURA PRASAD

8. ———— Relinquishment of right—Partition of property sold on application of vendee—Silence of pre-emptor—Waiver—Estoppel. Subsequently to the sale of a one-third share in a village, the vendee applied for partition of the share. A co-sharer, who had a right of pre-emption in respect of the sale, made no objection to this application, and the partition was effected. The co-sharer afterwards set up a claim to pre-emption. Held, that there was nothing in the conduct of the pre-emptor which could amount to estoppel, or to a waiver of his right of pre-emption. Motee Sah v. Goklee, N.-W. P. S. D. A. 11. ——— Forfeiture of right—Suit by pre-emptor and "stranger" to enforce right—Effects on pre-emptor's right—"Justice, equity, and good conscience"—Mahomedan law. Held, applying the doctrine of the Mahomedan law of pre-emption, such doctrine being in accordance with justice, equity, and good conscience, that a co-sharer in a village, who had under the wajib-ul-arz a right of pre-emption in respect of the sale of a share who joined a "stranger" (that is, a person who has not such right) with himself in suing to enforce such right, thereby forfeited such right. *Sheodiyal Ram v. 13. ——— Effect on right of pre-emption of joining a stranger in suit for pre-emption—Amendment of plaint—Striking out name of party. Where a plaintiff having a right to pre-empt joins with himself in a suit for pre-emption a stranger, i.e., a person who has no such right, he thereby forfeits his right to pre-empt, and this disability cannot be overcome by amending the plaint by striking out the name of the stranger. *Bhawani Prasad v. PRE-EMPTION—contd.*6. LOSS OR WAIVER OF RIGHT—conclld.

15. ——— Non-payment of price fixed by decree within the time limited by decree—Effect of an appeal from a decree for pre-emption on the time limited for paying in the pre-emptive price—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 214. A decree was given in favour of the plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption. The plaintiff paid in a portion only of the pre-emptive price within the time limited by the decree. The defendant appealed. Long after the time prescribed for payment by the original decree had expired, the defendant's appeal was dismissed, but the time for payment was not extended by the Appellate Court's decree. The plaintiff then, after the lapse of a period from the date of the appellate decree in excess of that which had been given him for payment by the decree of the first Court, paid in the balance of the pre-emptive price, which was accepted by the Court. On appeal by the defendant from the Court's order directing the balance of the pre-emptive price to be received, it was held that the order of the Court allowing the payment was without jurisdiction, the decree having, on the expiration of the time limited without payment by the plaintiff, become a decree in favour of the defendant, and the plaintiff having therefore lost his right of pre-emption under it. JAGGAR NATH PANDE v. JOKHU TEWARI . I. L. R. 18 All. 223

16. ——— Contract running with the land—Sale—Right of re-purchase, provided in a conveyance. In a conveyance executed by plaintiffs in favour of defendant No. 1's father, it was provided that, in case he sold the property subsequently, he would be bound to give preference to the plaintiffs, i.e., his vendors, to purchase the same for a certain sum, and on their refusal to accept the offer he would be at liberty to sell the same to others. After his father's death, defendant No. 1, without offering to sell the land to the plaintiffs, though they were willing to purchase it, sold the same to defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, who had notice of the contract. Held, that the contract was not binding on defendant No. 1, and therefore the sale to defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was not liable to be set aside. NOBIN CHANDRA SOOT v. NABAB ALI SARKAR (1900) . 5 C. W. N. 343

17. ——— Acquiescence—Wajib-ul-arz—Pre-emptor accepting a lease of property in suit from the vendee. Where in a suit for pre-emption based upon a custom declared in the wajib-ul-arz it was found that the pre-emptor had, with knowledge of his right as pre-emptor, accepted a lease of the land claimed from the vendee, it was held that this amounted to such an acquiescence in the sale as would bar the plaintiff's right of suit. *KISHAN LAL v. in the sense of the English common law. Hence, where in a village, which came into existence after 1846 there was found in 1869 evidence of a custom of pre-emption amongst the co-sharers, and further evidence of such a custom in 1885, it was held, that the custom was sufficiently established for the Courts to give effect to it. *Kuar Sen v. 2. ——— Local custom—Finding by lower Court regarding existence of alleged custom—Second appeal. Where on a question as to the existence or non-existence of a particular custom the lower Appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence, which is legally insufficient to establish an alleged custom, the question is one of law; or if it appears that the lower Appellate Court has clearly from its judgment disregarded legal evidence, the Court can interfere; but the High Court in second appeal is not bound notwithstanding that the lower Appellate Court has heard and weighed the legal evidence offered on both sides, to examine and consider the evidence in all cases when the existence or non-existence of an alleged custom is the sole question at issue. *Kakarla Abbaya v. 3. ——— Wajib-ul-arz—Inference of custom from entry in previous wajib-ul-arz—Mahomedan law. A village wajib-ul-arz, prepared in the year 1883, contained only the following entry with reference to pre-emption:—"Custom of pre-emption:—No pre-emption suit has been instituted, but the custom of pre-emption is accepted." But the wajib-ul-arz of the same village prepared in 1864, was more explicit. It ran as follows:—"Mention of the right of pre-emption:—When it is desired to transfer a share, the heirs and near brethren have the right first. On their refusal to take, the transferor is competent to sell, mortgage or assign to anyone he likes." Held, that in the wajib-ul-arz of 1883 the villagers intended to reproduce—and understood they were in fact reproducing—the custom of pre-emption that prevailed in 1864: that therefore the provisions of the Mahomedan law were not applicable. *POKHAR SINGH v. 5. ——— Wajib-ul-arz—Custom of contract—Interpretation of document—Exchange—Variation in terms of wajib-ul-arz. An exchange gives rise to a right of pre-emption when such right arises on a sale. Where there has been a variation in the terms of the wajib-ul-arzes prepared respectively at two settlements, and the previous wajib-ul-arz recorded a custom: Held, that the variation in the terms of the later wajib-ul-arz did not necessarily affect the custom. *Gulab Singh v. 2. ——— Pleading right of pre-emption—Right pleaded in defence to suit for possession by purchaser of co-sharer's rights and interests. A co-sharer of a village, who is in possession, cannot plead the existence of a right of pre-emption in defence to a suit for possession by the purchaser of the rights and interests of another co-sharer. *AJUDHIA BAKHSH SINGH v. 4. ——— Hindus—How far Mahomedan law of pre-emption applicable amongst Hindus—Statement of claim—Meaning and not form of statement to be considered. Held, that "in the absence of allegation or proof as to any custom different from, or not co-extensive with the Mahomedan law of pre-emption that law must be applied" between Hindus. *Jagdam Sahai v. 6. ——— Attachment of price—*Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 266 (k)—Execution of decree—Attachment—Contingent right—Right of pre-emption under a conditional decree for pre-emption. Held, that the interest in the pre-empted property of a successful pre-emptor, who has not yet paid the pre-emptive price fixed by his decree is an interest the attachment of which is prohibited by s. 266 (k) of the Code of Civil Procedure. *GORAKH SINGH v. 7. ——— Right of heir to maintain suit—*Wajib-ul-arz—Devolution of pre-emptor's interest before suit brought—Plaintiff pre-emptor joining as co-plaintiff the heir of a deceased co-sharer. Where a right of pre-emption exists by custom as recorded in the village wajib-ul-arz, the right having once accrued does not of necessity lapse by the death of the pre-emptor before making a claim, but descends along with the property in virtue of which it subsists to the heir of the pre-emptor. Secus if the pre-emptor sells such property to a stranger. The heir of a pre-emptor cannot be considered to be a "stranger" as that term is generally understood in connection with a customary right of pre-emption; nor will his joinder with a co-sharer in a suit for pre-emption have the effect of defeating the right of his co-plaintiff. So held by RICHARDS and TUD-BALL, JJ. (dissentiente BANERJI, J.). *Muhammad Yusuf Ali Khan v. 1. _____ Assertion of right, form of—
Election in alternative case. The right asserted in a claim founded on prescription should be strictly and clearly defined, and cannot be based on rights which are inconsistent. When a party is called upon by the Court to elect which branch of a double case he will proceed with, the election must be distinct and clear, and such as will bind him and will show accurately on the face of the record the claim (if any) which is abandoned. *BIJOY KESHUB ROY v. 4. _____ Foundation of prescriptive rights—Presumption of grant. Prescriptive rights are founded on the presumption of a grant from long-continued uninterrupted user and enjoyment as of right. CHUNDER JALEAH v. RAMCHURN MOOKERJEE . . . . . 15 W. R. 212

5. _____ Easements how created—User—Easement creating damage to servient tenement. A grant, either express or implied, in prescription, is necessary to establish an easement. Conclusive evidence is required to prove an easement, the result of which is great damage to the servient tenement. Without an uninterrupted user, there can be no claim to an easement. ZUMMEER ALI v. DOORGABUN . . . 1 W. R. 230

6. _____ Long possession—User—Presumption of title. Long and undisturbed user or possession confers title by prescription, because it is presumed to be founded on title. GOOROO PERSHAD ROY v. BYKUNTO CHUNDER ROY . . . 6 W. R. 82

8. _____ Right of user—Ancient and uninterrupted right. A party claiming the right of user by prescription over the property of another must show not only that the right has existed from ancient days, but also that it has been exercised as

The period was fixed by the Limitation Act, 1871, s. 27, at twenty years, and that provision has been continued in the present Limitation Act, s. 26.

12. ——— Alterations in property—Severance of tenements—Continuance of easement without grant. If the alterations which a man makes in his property before alienation of any part of it are palpable and manifest, and in their nature permanent changes in the disposition of the property, so that one part thereof becomes dependent on another, the purchaser of either part must take the land either burdened or benefited, as the case may be, by the qualities thus attached thereto. This room corresponded with B's first floor, and had an open terrace on the top of it. The structure by which A connected the two houses was quite independent of B's house. It was supported throughout by wooden pillars adjoining B's wall, which the cross beams did not penetrate or touch. But the structure was built so close to B's wall that the latter served as a side wall to the room. This state of things had existed for upwards of twenty years. Held, that A did not acquire any easement over B's wall by merely building on his own ground close to B's house, even though A had built no side wall to his own house, but trusted to B's keeping up his wall to shelter his (A's) house on that side. GORDHAN DALPATRAM v. The defendants denied the plaintiff's title, and alleged that they always used the chabutra as a sitting place, and that during the Moharram the tazias and alums were exhibited upon the chabutra and a takht was placed upon it. The Court of first instance found that the defendants had a right to use the land in the manner claimed during the Moharram. The lower Appellate Court, on the question of the defendants' right to use the said land in the manner claimed by them, found as follows: "That various mirasis whose connexion with each other is not established have within a period of twenty years or so placed tazias upon the land and sung there." Held, per AIKMAN, J.—A right to place tazias on a certain plot of land during the Moharram is a right of the nature of the customary easements referred to in s. 18 of Act V of 1882, and may be acquired as such by prescription. *Ashraf Ali v. Where a local custom excluding or limiting the general rules of law is set up, a Court should not decide that it exists unless such Court is satisfied of its reasonableness and its certainty as to extent and application, and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted, or by stealth, or by force, and that it had been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally by agreement or otherwise the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which it concerned. *KUAR SEN v. iff's favour for khas possession of such lands only as B held as ijaradar. But although symbolical possession of the lands decreed was delivered to the plaintiff, B continued to hold possession of all the lands in suit for more than twelve years. On several occasions during this period B made assertions of title as permanent tenant to the knowledge of the plaintiff's agents. Held, that B acquired by prescription a right to hold the lands as a permanent tenant, but that the sub-soil, in respect of which no prescriptive right had been made out by B, remained with the landlord. It was to be presumed that after symbolical possession was delivered to the plaintiff, B continued to hold the lands as on the title which he had already asserted in the suit, and limitation ran from that date and not from the date or dates on which B subsequently made assertions of permanent title to the knowledge of plaintiff's agents. 25. ———— New windows—Injunction—Alteration of easement—New windows higher than the old ones—New easement—Indian Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 23. Plaintiff had two windows in the rear wall of his house. In 1886 he rebuilt his house, and opened new windows, which were of nearly the same size, but were a little higher than the old ones. In 1899 defendant built his house and blocked up these two new windows. The plaintiff sued for an injunction. The first Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree and granted an injunction, holding that the plaintiff did not lose his easement by changing the position of the windows, because the new ones were nearly of the same dimension, and, as their position was higher than that of the old windows, the burden on the servient tenement was rather less than before. On second appeal:—Held, reversing the decree and dismissing the suit, that the easement claimed in respect of the new windows, which did not receive the same cones of light as were enjoyed through the old ones, was quite distinct from the easement in respect of the old windows; and that, therefore, the easement respecting them could be acquired only by enjoying it for the required length of time. *BAI HARI-GANGA v. When a building is so far completed as to show an intention to use it as a dwelling-house, with certain windows or openings for light and air, from that time it becomes the duty of those who are concerned in preventing a prescriptive right to the access of light and air from arising in respect of such windows, to take steps to challenge and hinder the acquisition of such right. PRANJIVAN DAS HARJIVAN DAS v. IV, c. 71. In a suit to remove an obstruction to the enjoyment of light and air and for damages:—Held, by MARKBY, J., that in cases where English law is applicable, the law of prescription is that existing in England prior to the passing of the Prescription Act. Although the enjoyment of light and air as of right for upwards of thirty years is evidence from which an enjoyment from time immemorial may be presumed, yet, inasmuch as the period of legal memory is about 700 years, the claim by prescription in this country is defeated by the fact that English law has only been introduced here for about 200 years. Where an easement has been enjoyed for upwards of twenty years, the presumption of a grant is a question of fact and not of law. Distinction drawn between positive and negative servitudes. Held, by PEACOCK, C.J.—A right to air may be acquired by express grant, but it cannot be acquired merely by presumption arising from user, whether the presumption is a presumption of prescription or not. The only amount of light which can be claimed by prescription or by length of enjoyment, without an actual grant, is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. The uninterrupted enjoyment of light for twenty years acquiesced in by the owner of the servient tenement raises a presumption of right which, in the absence of any evidence to rebut it, ought to be acted upon by those who have to determine the facts. Such presumption is one of law, and not of fact. Held, by NORMAN, J.—Servitudes are known and recognized both in Hindu and Mahomedan law. A right to the unobstructed access of light is not a property or interest in the light itself, nor a right to be enjoyed in or over the soil of the adjacent owner. By analogy to the law of limitation, an adverse and uninterrupted use of an easement for twenty years confers a right to it; therefore, where the access of light and air through the windows of a house has been enjoyed for twenty years, and there is nothing to rebut the presumption of title, the law implies an obligation on the part of an adjoining owner not to interrupt the free access of necessary light and air through such windows. *BAGRAM v. 31. ————— Knowledge and acquiescence—2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 71. In a suit for enforcing the removal of an obstruction to the alleged right of the plaintiffs to the light and air through certain windows in a room of a house contiguous to the house of the defendants, it was proved that the plaintiffs had purchased the premises in 1847, and that the building of the room in which the windows in question were had been subsequently commenced in 1849; and the Judge of the Court below found on the evidence that the room and windows had been completed and in use for a period of twenty years prior to the date of suit, May 18th, 1870; that the plaintiffs had enjoyed the light and air through the windows for a period of twenty years without any interruption by the defendants; and it being proved that the defendants had by buildings obstructed the light and air coming to the plaintiff's windows, he granted an injunction commanding the defendants to take down so much of the wall as rose to the height of more than five feet above the level of the plaintiff's floor, and restraining them, the defendants, from continuing their building above the height of five feet. Held, on appeal, per COUCH, C.J.—By the English law before the Prescription Act (which is the law governing the case), the presumption of a grant, in the case of a claim to the access and use of light for a building, was a presumption of fact, the presumption being founded on the consent or acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement. Acquiescence implies knowledge, and knowledge may be presumed where the owner is in possession. There must be knowledge for twenty years, at any rate; if the knowledge were for a lesser period, whether there was a grant would be a question of fact, and no presumption could arise. The question of whether or not there was knowledge is one preliminary to the consideration whether or not a grant is to be presumed. Held, on the evidence, that there had been no knowledge on the part of the defendants during the whole time, and therefore there had not been a twenty years' enjoyment of the light and air with their acquiescence. Held, per MARKBY, J.—The presumption of a lost grant is one of fact. An uninterrupted user for twenty years would be evidence from which, taken with other circumstances, it might be inferred that a grant had existed. No "patientia" or "submission" on the part of the defendants being shown so as to constitute an acknowledgment of the existence of the right of the plaintiffs to the light and air, the defendants were entitled to succeed. BHUBAN MOHAN BANERJEE v. ELLIOTT

6 B. L. R. 85

Held, on appeal to the Privy Council, that the law of prescription applicable to India was the English law previous to the passing of the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 71. In order to establish a right to light and air, an uninterrupted user of at least twenty years, with the acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement, must be shown. In a suit to restrain the defendants from obstructing the light and air through certain windows of a house belonging to the plaintiffs, it was shown that the enjoyment of the alleged right began on 14th April 1850, the windows then being in a sufficiently finished state to create the right. In March 1870 the plaintiffs received notice from the defendants of their intention to erect a building which would have the effect of obstructing the passage of light and air through the plaintiffs' windows. The building was actually commenced on 23rd March 1870, but it was not actually raised to such a height as to amount to an obstruction until some days after the twenty years had elapsed. Held, that there was not an enjoyment for twenty years with the acquiescence of the defendants such as entitled the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. Quære: Whether proof of constructive knowledge on the part of the defendants would not be sufficient to show their acquiescence. *ELLIOTT v. the plaintiff's house, it appeared that both the tenements had formerly constituted the joint property of a Hindu family, and that in 1835 a partition took place among the various members composing it, by which the tenement in the occupation of the plaintiff became separated from that occupied by the defendant; and that the latter property was, in 1860, purchased by the plaintiff jointly with one G, but under the purchase the plaintiff took sole possession thereof; that in 1867, however, he relinquished it in favour of G in pursuance of an award, wherein it was found the plaintiff had no right or title thereto; and that in 1870 it was purchased by the defendant, who, in 1871 and 1872, erected the obstructions complained of by the plaintiff. Held, that though, in the interval between 1860 and 1867, the plaintiff had not such an estate in the servient tenement as to constitute unity of title in him to the two tenements, and thereby extinguish all easements between them, yet the unity of possession in the plaintiff during that period excluded the operation of s. 27 of Act IX of 1871, as the enjoyment during that time was not "of right." Semble: In order that the enjoyment should be "of right," there must be an adverse exercise of it as against the servient holder. Act IX of 1871 does not exclude other modes than therein provided of acquiring an easement by enjoyment. In this case, applying the law of prescription in force in Calcutta prior to 1871, which was the English law previous to the passing of 2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 71, a grant might be implied independently of user; and, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff was entitled to such right to easements of light and air as can be inferred from enjoyment, i.e., a right to restrain the defendant from committing any act whereby the access of light or air should be so diminished as with respect to air to prove a nuisance or injurious to health, and with respect to light to render the house unfit for comfortable habitation. MODHOOSOODUN DEY v. A plaintiff entitled as of right to light and air through a certain window, subsequently enlarged it, and on the light thereto being interfered with by the defendant, gave him notice to remove the obstruction two days after it had been completed. Held, that he had been guilty of no delay in taking steps to prevent the obstruction, and that he was entitled to a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant to remove it. PROVABUTTY DABEE v. Where the defendant, without leave or license, took possession of the plaintiff's window as completely as if he had blocked it up altogether:—Held, that no precedent warranted the substitution of damages for an injunction in such a case against the plaintiff's will. The defendant's building, which obstructed the access of light and air to the plaintiff's window, began in May, and the plaintiff instituted his suit in July. Held, that, prima facie, the plaintiff was entitled to the removal of the obstruction, and that it was for the defendant to show that the right had been lost by acquiescence. NANDKISHOR BALGOVAN v. 36. ——— Injunction—Damages—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 51, cl. It was proved that the wall intended to be built would so shut out the light and air as to render the room completely dark and unfit for use. The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction as prayed. The defendants appealed to the Joint Judge, who amended the lower Court's decree by ordering the removal of the injunction and directing, in its stead, a new window to be opened in the plaintiff's house to the east of the window in question. 38. ————— Obstruction of right to light and air—Suit for injunction or damages—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54. The plaintiff was the owner of a house in Jambulwadi Street in Bombay. The defendant owned a house to the east of it, and between the two houses was a gully three feet seven inches wide, the part of which next the defendant's house was a gutter. On the ground floor of the plaintiff's house were four windows, and on the first floor two windows, all looking out into the gully, and all of them ancient windows. The defendant's house originally was a little higher than the plaintiff's house, and consisted of a ground floor, a first floor, and a loft. Shortly before suit, the defendant pulled down this house, and on the same site began to build a new four-storied house with a loft. The plaintiff sued for an injunction, alleging that this new house, which would be of much greater height than the old one, would completely block up his ancient windows and cause him material damage, there being no other window in his house on the side next the defendant. The defendant in his written statement denied that his new house would cause material damage to the plaintiff. He alleged that his old house, which was higher than the plaintiff's, had a projecting cornice, so that hardly any direct light came to the plaintiff's windows, which were almost, if not entirely, lighted by the light that came from each end of the gully. He further stated that his new house would have no cornice, and that he had widened the gully, so that light to the plaintiff's windows would not be appreciably diminished, but that, even if the passage had not been widened, there would have been little diminution of light. He also alleged that the plaintiff had other windows and sources of light than the said six windows. While denying all damage, the defendant, however, to avoid litigation and without prejudice, paid into Court R200, which, he said, was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff. After filing the suit, the plaintiff obtained a rule for an injunction at the date of which the walls of the defendant's house had been built up as far as the second floor. The rule was subsequently discharged, the defendant consenting that the cause should be argued at the hearing as if the new house was then in the same condition. The defendant, however, subsequently continued to build, and at the date of hearing it was practically complete. The lower Court (STARLING, J.) found that prior to the building of the new house direct light came to the plaintiff's windows to the extent at all events of 5 inches, and in addition to this a considerable amount of lateral light came to the windows over the defendant's roof. The Court held that, as the plaintiff had a right to this light by prescription, he was absolutely entitled to the whole of it; that the defendant had by his new building cut off all the direct light, and that practically all the light left to the plaintiff was reflected light, the amount of which depended on the condition in which the defendant might choose to keep the walls of his house. Under these circumstances, the lower Court, looking at the house as if it was still in the condition in which it was at the time the injunction was discharged, held that the plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction, and directed the defendant to remove the upper portion of the house, which had been built since that time. On appeal:—Held, that, although the plaintiff's light had been sensibly diminished by the defendant's new building, there had not been such a large, material, and substantial damage as to require interference by injunction, or that the plaintiff's room had been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it might reasonably be expected to be used. The Appeal Court therefore varied the decree of STARLING, J., and refused an injunction, but ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff R500 as damages. GHANASHAM NILKANT NADKARNI v. 39. ————— Access of light and air to windows—Agreement preventing the acquirement of an easement—Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 15, expl.—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54. A promise was made regarding the access of light and air, by the plaintiff's predecessor in title, to windows placed by him in the upper part of his house which was separated by a narrow space from a building opposite belonging then to the defendant's predecessor. This promise was that the owner of the house would make no objection to the blocking up of the windows in question when the owner of the building opposite should rebuild it and raise it to a higher elevation. The owner of the windows accepted this promise. After the lapse of twenty years, the defendant, having given notice that he would act on the agreement, proceeded to rebuild; and he raised his building higher than the old one, causing the obstruction of which the plaintiff now complained. The High Court (FARRAN, J.) in its Original Jurisdiction decided that the case was not one for an injunction, but for damages, and gave the plaintiff a decree for a sum as compensation. On appeal, the Appellate Bench of the High Court (PARSONS and STRACHEY, JJ.) held, that the plaintiff had made out no prescriptive right to light and air, and the cases of Dhanjibhoj v. Lisboa, I. L. R. 13 Bom. 252, and Ghanasham Nilkant Nadkarni v. Moroba Ramchandra Pai, I. L. I. L. R. 20 Bom. 704

Held, on appeal to the Privy Council, that there having been a continuing agreement between the parties within the meaning of expl. 1 of the Easements Act, 1882, the acquirement by the plaintiff of an easement by prescription had been prevented. From the agreement it was apparent that the enjoyment of light and air had not been granted as an easement. SULTAN NAWAZ JUNG v. RUSTOMJI NANABHOY BYRAMJI JIJIBHOY

41. ——— South breeze—Limitation Acts (IX of 1871), s. 27; (XV of 1877), s. 26—English Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. IV), c. 71—Limitation Act, effect of, on the pre-existing law as to nature and extent of the right to light or air. The Indian Limitation Act, unlike the English Prescription Act, places light and air on the same footing; and the object of the Prescription Act and of the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act is not to enlarge the extent and operation of the easement, but to provide another and more convenient way of acquiring such easements—a mode independent of legal fiction and capable of easy proof in a Court of law; these Acts do not therefore alter in any way the pre-existing law as to the nature and extent of the right. The only amount of light for a dwelling-house which can be claimed by prescription or by length of time (whether prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871) without an actual grant is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. Rule laid down in Bagram v. Khettranath Karformah, 3 B. L. R. O. C. 41, followed. The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light. To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871, in a case (where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling-houses by building on adjoining land, the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house; in other words, to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business. There is no such right as a right to the uninterrupted flow of south breeze as such. The "45 degree rule" is not a positive rule of law, but is a circumstance which the Court may take into consideration, and is especially valuable when the proof of the obstruction is not definite or satisfactory. 42. ——— Partition of a joint family house—Effect of partition by a consent decree where the decree does not reserve any right to the use of light and air—Implied grant of easement upon severance of tenement. On partition of a family dwelling-house by a consent decree the plaintiff claimed a right to the passage of light and air necessary for the enjoyment of his share of the building in the way in which it was enjoyed at the time of the partition, though no such right was expressly reserved in the decree. The defence was that the principle of an implied grant of easement upon severance of the tenement should not be applied to the case, but that the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit. Held, that the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience should be applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed, even in the absence of any express provision in the decree reserving such right. Quære: Whether the principle of an implied grant of easement in severance of tenements would apply in a case where the partition was effected by a decree of the Court in a contested suit, and not by a consent of parties. Thus where Government paid a yearly sum of Rs 2-4-6 to a chirda haqdar, by whom no services in return were rendered, from the year 1818 to 1860, and then discontinued such payment to the heir of the last holder, it was held that such yearly payments gave the haqdar no prescriptive rights against Government. COLLECTOR OF SURAT v. Where an allowance by Government was neither incidental to an hereditary office nor a charge upon immoveable property, and was not supported by a grant from Government, the enjoyment of it for thirty years did not create a prescriptive title to its continuance under Regulation V of 1827, s. 1, cl. 1. GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY v. A substantial interference with such a right, where it exists, if without the consent or acquiescence of the owner of the dominant tenement, affords such owner a good cause of action. Each case in which such a right is in dispute must be decided upon its own facts, the primary question in all cases being whether the privacy in fact and substantially exists, and has been and in fact enjoyed. If this is answered in the negative, no further question arises. (i) RIGHT OF WAY.

55. — Path across land—Implied grant—Modes of acquiring easements—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26. In a suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant from using a path on the plaintiff's land, it appeared that the land held by the plaintiff and defendant had originally belonged to one owner, and that the plaintiff and the defendant had obtained their respective tenements more than twenty years previously. The path had been admittedly made by the original owner, but the plaintiff contended that, when he purchased the land, he had closed the path. This the Munsif disbelieved, and refused the injunction. The District Judge, treating the case as if it fell under s. 26 of the Limitation Act, and being of opinion that the defendant had not proved twenty years' peaceable, open, and uninterrupted exercise of the right of way, gave the plaintiff a decree. Held, that the mode of acquiring an easement provided by s. 26 of the Limitation Act is not the only way in which an easement may be acquired, but an easement may also be acquired by implied grant. In the present case the use of the path might be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, in which case there would be an easement of necessity; or the use of the path, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance; and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous, there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement. *CHARU SURNOKAR v. 57. — Lane from public road to house—User—Limitation Act (XV of 1871), s. 27. In a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's right of way over a lane leading from a public road to a door in the plaintiff's house, which lane the defendant, who resided at the end of the lane, had obstructed so as to prevent access to the plaintiff's house, it appeared that the house in respect of which the easement was claimed belonged in 1855 to one H C, during the time of whose occupation there was user of the right of way over the lane to the door, until he had the door bricked up. In April 1865 the house was sold by H C, and in June 1867 was conveyed by the purchaser to the plaintiff. From the blocking up of the door until the plaintiff's purchase no user was proved. The suit was brought in June 1875, about a month after the erection by the defendant of the obstruction complained of. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the owner of the dominant tenement having, with the intention of preventing the use of the way, created an obstruction of a permanent nature which rendered such use impossible, the way could not be said, during the continuance of such obstruction, to have "been openly enjoyed" within the meaning of s. 27 of Act IX of 1871; and that accordingly, though there had been no interruption within the meaning of that section, a right to the way had not been established under the Act. *SHAM CHURN AUDDY v. existing easement, and therefore will carry no right of way over the land of the grantor, though, under certain circumstances, even these words will have a wider construction. Where further words are used, such as "therewith held or used," such words will carry a way formerly enjoyed as an easement, but as to which the right has been suspended by unity of possession. But such words will not carry a way made by the owner of both properties during the unity of possession for his own greater convenience in the use of the two properties jointly. But where, during the unity of possession, a way, which has never existed as an easement, is in fact used for the convenience of one of the tenements afterwards severed, the authorities show that the words in question are large enough to carry it. One who has a right of passage over any place must not, any more than the owner of the soil might, use it in an excessive or improper manner so as to obstruct the exercise by others of their rights. The acts of several persons may together constitute a nuisance though the damage occasioned by the acts of any one, if taken alone, would not be appreciable. CHUNDER KOOMAR MOOKERJI v. ## (j) RIGHT CONCERNING WATER.

65. ———— Right to flow of water—Obstruction to flow of water—Continual user. The plaintiff brought a suit to establish his right to an uninterrupted flow of water through a channel which ran into a tank in a village which was the plaintiff's property, and to compel the removal of sluices erected across the said channel by the first defendant's predecessor in office, and used for the purpose of diverting the flow of the water. Held, that acquiescence in the sense of mere submission to the interruption of the enjoyment does not destroy or impair an easement. To be effectual for that purpose, it must be attributable to an intention on the part of the owner to abandon the benefit before enjoyed. Held, also, that the diversion of the water was a continuing injury down to the time of the institution of the suit, and that the plaintiff's suit was not barred. Held, also, that it must appear from the circumstances in evidence in such case that the interference or obstruction complained of is not a trivial but a substantial injury in order to warrant relief by way of injunction. Held, also, that the right to an easement in the flow of water through an artificial water-course is as valid against the Government as it is against a private owner of land. Held, per SCOTLAND, C.J., that the grant of an easement may be presumed from mere continued user of the privilege openly enjoyed by the occupiers of the dominant tenement as of right throughout any long period of time without interruption on the part of the proprietor of the servient tenement, but with this qualification, that the user should be for at least the period of adverse possession which is prescribed by s. 1, cl. 12, of the Act of Limitations, as a bar to the enforcing of title to corporeal property. Per INNES, J.—That no precise period of uninterrupted enjoyment can be fixed as sufficient of itself to establish a right to an easement. *PONNUSAWMI TEVAR v. lands of the lessor :—Held, that the mere permission did not amount to a grant. Held, also, that there was no implied grant of the right to use water so as to derogate from the rights of those through whose lands the stream would otherwise flow. Held, also, that the right under the permission might be terminated by revocation of the latter, but that such revocation would only be permitted on the terms of the landlord paying to the tenant the expenses which that permission had led him to incur. Even when the dominant and servient tenements are the property of different persons, a man may license an act in its inception, and yet be entitled to relief when the act is found to have injurious consequences which he could not have contemplated at the time of the license. *KESAVA PILLAI v. 68. ———— Exclusive right to use of water. The plaintiffs, as shareholders in, and heads of, the villages of Ariyur and Kurvirkudi, sued for an injunction directing the defendants to close an irrigation channel which was opened in 1869 and to remove the sluice. It appeared that a channel called Kaduvai had, by means of a branch, for very many years, supplied the plaintiff's village with water. The village of Partical, of which the first defendant was mirasidar, up to the date of the opening of the new channel, had received its supply from the Mallattar channel. The supply from this was insufficient, and then the second defendant, the Superintending Engineer (representing Government), designed a new channel from the Kaduvai to supplement the deficiency of the Mallattar. The water of the Kaduvai was diverted into the new channel at a point above the point of divergence of the branch channel from the Kaduvai to the plaintiff's village. The relief was prayed for in the Court of first instance, on the ground that the supply by the Kaduvai had never been sufficient for the wants of the village, and that the new channel must necessarily cause a still further deficiency. The Civil Judge found that the plaintiffs had sustained no loss by the opening of the new channel, and dismissed the suit. On appeal it was contended, first, that plaintiffs had an absolute right to the uninterrupted flow of all the water in the Kaduvai channel without subtraction or diminution by the defendants or by the Government, represented by the second defendant, and that any diminution, though not causing loss, was an invasion of their rights; second, that if they had not such absolute right, they had a right to a supply of water for the necessary purposes of irrigation and otherwise for their village, and that possibility of loss at some future time, arising from a possible wrongful diminution of the water to their detriment through the new sluice and channel, entitled them to the relief claimed. Upon the first point :—Held, that the plaintiffs had not the extensive and exclusive right to the water contended for by them, but that their right was limited to the beneficial enjoyment of the water for the irrigation and other necessary purpose of their tenancies as heretofore enjoyed. Also that the Government, as proprietor of the Kaduvai channel and water in it, had, subject to the above limited use by the plaintiffs and other villages in the same position as the plaintiffs, a right to distribute the water of the Kaduvai channel for the benefit of the public. *Ponnusawmi Tevar v. The only ground upon which the plaintiff's claim was put was that they had received the water for a long time. The District Court held that the Government were authorized to regulate the distribution of water in such cases. Held, on regular appeal, per HOLLOWAY, J., that no legal right was shown by the plaintiffs which could have been violated by the defendants, and that, if such right were established, there was nothing to show that a decree for damages would not have been the proper remedy. Per INNES, J.—That the evidence did not show any diminution of the supply of water below the quantity to which the plaintiffs were entitled. *VENKATA REDDY v. 70. ————— Interruption—

Abandonment. The plaintiff claimed a prescriptive right to the flow of the surface drainage water from the land of the defendant on to his land. Held, that such an easement can be acquired only where the water flows in a definite channel. In a suit for interrupting the flow of water from the land of the defendant to the land of the plaintiff it appeared that eight years before suit, the defendant had diverted the water, and that it had been diverted ever since. Held, that the right, if acquired, would not necessarily be lost by the interruption, but that, if the plaintiff acquiesced during that time in the interruption, it might be some evidence of an abandonment of the right. *KENA MAHOMED v. the plaintiff enjoyed the right of having an egress for his rain-water through a drain in the defendants' land. The plaintiff, more than two years after the date of the obstruction, sued the defendants for the removal of the obstruction. Held, that though, under the circumstances, the plaintiff had failed to prove a title acquired under s. 26 of Act XV of 1877, yet the plaintiff, having a title evidenced by immemorial user, did not require the aid of that Act; and inasmuch as the obstruction complained of constituted a continuing nuisance, as to which the cause of action was renewed de die in diem, the plaintiff's claim was not barred by any provision of the Act, but, on the contrary, was saved by the express provision of s. 23. *PUNJA KUVARJI v. They divided this land in 1865, and, ten years later, built at their joint expense a partition wall between their respective portions, leading a drain in the wall for the passage of water from A's to B's land. In 1885 B stopped the flow of water by this drain. A thereupon sued for an injunction to restrain B from causing the obstruction. The Court of first instance decreed the claim. The Appellate Court rejected the claim, on the ground that there was no express agreement between the parties that the water should be carried off by the drain in the wall. Held, on second appeal to the High Court, that A would be entitled to the easement claimed by him if he could show either that it was necessary for the enjoyment of his share of the property or that it was apparent and continuous and necessary for enjoying the share as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect. *PURSHOTAM SAKHARAM v. The plaintiffs' land was in a higher level than that of the defendants, and from time immemorial the surplus water used to flow from the plaintiffs' land through certain passages in the "al" and across the defendants' land. The defendants closed up the passages and increased the height of the "al." Held, that, it having been established that for a long series of years the waters from the plaintiffs' lands had been accustomed to escape in a particular direction and by certain separate passages across the defendants' land, the defendants could not do anything which would interfere with the plaintiffs' rights in this respect. *IMAM ALI v. tion of agreement to use water. In a suit to establish a right of water and for damages for interruption of the same, the facts were as follows: Plaintiff and defendant by agreement between them constructed a dam across a main channel and from thence a smaller channel was made through the land of the defendant to the plaintiff's land, by means of which it was agreed that the plaintiff should be at liberty to irrigate the fields. The agreement was acted upon for a long course of years. Held, that the agreement was not a mere parol license revocable at the pleasure of the defendant, but an agreement which created a right of easement, unlimited in point of time to the use of the water by the plaintiff, and imposed upon the defendant the corresponding duty of allowing the accustomed supply to flow. A mere license differs in its effects from a license coupled with the creation of an interest. The former is revocable, but the latter is subject to the same incidents, and is as binding and irrevocable as any other contract, gift, or grant. KRISHNA v. RAYAPPA SHANBHAGA

75. ——— Artificial water-course.

The right to water flowing to a man's land through an artificial water-course, constructed on a neighbour's land, must rest on some grant or arrangement proved or presumed, from or with the owner of the land from which the water is artificially brought, or on some other legal origin. Such a right may be presumed from the time, manner, and circumstances under which the easement has been enjoyed. RAMESSUR PERSAD NARAIN SING v. KOONJ BEHARI PATTUK water-course. In 1860 R, whom the plaintiff in this suit represented, agreed with Government for the lease of a plot of ground called the D estate and got possession. In 1865 R took a lease of the estate from Government for 999 years, to enure as a lease from 1860, the time at which he entered upon possession. The defendant's estate adjoined plaintiff's. Defendant's title, also derived from Government, dated from 1869. A formal lease was granted to his predecessor in 1874 in similar terms to that to plaintiff. In 1864 R opened an artificial channel for the conveyance of water for the use of his estate. This channel was taken off from a ravine in Government waste land, and before reaching the plaintiff's estate passed through land which in 1864 belonged to Government, but which subsequently formed portion of the defendant's estate. When the lease, under which the defendant claimed, was made in 1874, the flow of water through the channel was enjoyed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued to restrain the defendant from interfering with and diverting the flow of water in this channel and for damages. Held, that the flow of water in the channel having existed as an apparent and continuous easement in fact at the time of the execution of the lease in 1865, a right to it passed by implication under that lease, and that the plaintiff was accordingly entitled to it; that the defendant, whose lease was subject to that right, was not entitled to interrupt the flow; but that he might use the water in a reasonable manner, as it flowed through his land. MORGAN v. 77. — Obstructing water-course

—Presumption of title founded on user—Limitation Act, 1871, s. 27, and Art. 31—Continuing act of wrong. More than twenty years, and possibly fifty or sixty, before suit, the plaintiff's ancestors and predecessors in estate had constructed and used a páin, or artificial water-course, on the defendants' land, making compensation to them. The páin, by a channel at one part of its course, contributed to the water in a tál, or reservoir, belonging to the defendants; and by a channel at another part took the water which overflowed from the tál, after the defendants had used as much of the water therein as they required. Less than twenty years before the suit, the defendants, without authority, obstructed the flow of water along the páin in several places. The Courts below differed as to whether some of these obstructions had not been made more than two years before the suit, the rest having been made within that period. Held, that the provisions of Act IX of 1871—a remedial Act, and neither prohibitory nor exhaustive—did not exclude, or interfere with, the acquirement of rights otherwise than under them. A title might be acquired under that Act by a person having no other right at all; but it did not exclude, or interfere with, other titles and modes of acquiring easements. And s. 27, by allowing a user of twenty years, if exercised until within two years of suit, under the conditions prescribed, to give, without more, a title, did not prevent proof of an easement founded on another title, independently of the Act. Such a long enjoyment as the plaintiff had proved should be referred to a legal origin, and the long user of the páin and of the superfluous water of the tál afforded evidence giving rise to a presumption that a grant, or an agreement, had been made creating an easement. Although, on the assumption that some of the obstructions in question had existed for more than two years before the suit, the plaintiff might not have shown a right under Act IX of 1871, s. 27, yet he did not require its aid. Held, also, that such obstructions being continuous acts, as to which the cause of action accrued de die in diem, Act IX of 1871, Sch. II, Part V, cl. 31, fixing two years from the date of the obstruction as the period of limitation "for obstructing a water-course," did not preclude a suit complaining of obstructions, though made more than two years preceding the date of the commencement of the suit. RAJRUP KOER v. But surface water not flowing in a stream, and not permanently collected in a pool, tank, or otherwise, is not a subject of easement by prescription, though it may be the subject of an express grant or contract; (iii) It is the natural right of every owner of land to collect or dispose of all water on the surface which does not pass in a defined channel; (iv) Riparian owners are entitled to use and consume the water of the stream for drinking and household purposes, for watering their cattle, for irrigating their land, and for purposes of manufacture, subject to the conditions (i) that the use is reasonable, (ii) that it is required for their purposes as owners of the land, and (iii) that it does not destroy or render useless or materially diminish or affect the application of the water by inferior riparian owners in the exercise either of their natural right or their right of easement, if any; (v) It was therefore necessary to ascertain where the streams rose, and the course, source, and length of their tributaries. The roof of the defendant's house, built more than thirty years previously, projected over a part of this space. The plaintiff built a new storey to his house, with a roof overhanging the roof of the defendant's house, and under an alleged custom of the country (Ahmedabad) claimed a right to remove the part of the defendant's roof which projected over his (plaintiff's) land. He also sued to establish his right to an easement as against the defendant of compelling the defendant to receive upon the roof of his house the rain-water which flowed from the newly erected roof of the plaintiff. Held, with regard to the former claim, that if the enjoyment by the defendant were considered as possession, by him, of the space occupied by his projecting roof, the Limitation Act extinguished the plaintiff's right to sue; and if such enjoyment were to be regarded as a mere easement, then to the uninterrupted user of more than thirty years vested in the defendant a proprietary right to the same. Held, further, with regard to the plaintiff's claim to an easement, that the plaintiff could only have acquired such easement either by contract or prescription, on neither of which did he rely. known to be so at the time of the said transactions. The notes became due, and were dishonoured, the firm having in the meanwhile become insolvent. The Bank thereupon sued the Official Assignee, as assignee of the firm's estate, to recover the sums due on the notes, and for a declaration that it was entitled to a charge on the immoveable properties held by it as security. The Official Assignee contended that, under s. 37 of the Presidency Banks Act (XI of 1876), it was illegal for the Bank to lend money on equitable mortgage and that no valid charge had been created. Held, that, notwithstanding the provisions of the said Act, the Bank was entitled to realize the securities. Held, also, that the provisions of s. 37 of the Act did not invalidate a charge on immoveable property created as a security for a bond fide liability already in existence. The words of s. 37 impose a restriction on making a loan on mortgage of immoveable property, not upon the Bank but upon the Directors. As between the Directors and the Bank, the Directors would be liable for any loss resulting from the breach of the provisions of the sections, but the mortgagors could not repudiate the obligation into which they purported to enter, and the Official Assignee was not in a more favourable position. TURNER v. —Right of a shareholder to inspect register of shareholders of the Bank—Object of such inspection—Common law right of member of corporation to inspect books of the corporation—Companies Acts (X of 1866), s. 231 ; (VI of 1882), s. 256. The respondent as a shareholder in the appellant Bank claimed a right to inspect, copy and make extracts from the register of shareholders which the Bank refused to allow, but offered to furnish him with the list he asked for, if he could satisfy them that he required it for use in his own interests as a shareholder. Without accepting this offer the respondent brought a suit against the Bank in which he based his claim on irregularities which he alleged existed in the management of the Bank, in the election of Directors and in other matters, and stated that he claimed inspection of the register to enable him to communicate with the other shareholders and obtain their assent to resolutions for improvement in the Bank's management to be proposed at a future meeting. The first Court dismissed the suit, but the High Court on its Appellate Side reversed the decision and passed a decree giving the respondent without any restriction the right to inspect a copy extract from the register, which he had originally demanded from the Bank. Held, by the Judicial Committee, that the suit should be treated according to the principles regulating an application for a writ of mandamus, and in that view the respondent was not entitled to succeed, unless he showed clearly that he had the specific right to enforce for which he asked for the interference of the Court, that he had claimed the exercise of that right and none other, and that his claim had been refused. In this case there was no statute giving him an unrestricted right, the appellant Bank (which was incorporated under Act XI of 1876) being by s. 231 of the Companies Act, 1866, and s. 256 of the Companies Act, 1882, expressly exempted from the operation of those statutes. The result of the authorities as to the nature and extent of the common law right, which every member of a corporation has, to inspect the documents of the corporation was that "the privilege of inspection was confined to cases where the member of the corporation has in view some definite right or object of his own, and to those documents which would tend to illustrate such right or object." It is not sufficient for him to record that the offence is proved, for that may necessarily be implied to be his opinion from the fact that he has convicted the accused. 7. ——— Judgment—Record of reasons for conviction—Evidence—Sentence of imprisonment—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 370, cl. (i). S. 362 of the Criminal Procedure Code prescribes that the evidence in appealable cases, that is, in which a Presidency Magistrate imposes a fine exceeding Rs 200 or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, shall be duly recorded. There is no obligation in law to record evidence in other cases; the discretion rests with the Magistrate. Under the provisions of s. 370, cl. (i), of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate should state the reasons for conviction in such a manner that the High Court on revision may judge whether there were sufficient materials before him to support the conviction. The law does not demand a full and complete statement of reasons, but only a brief one. ENAMAN v. EMPEROR (1904) . I. L. R. 31 Calc. 983

8. ——— Presidency Magistrate—Judgment, recording of—Evidence, taking down of—Reason for conviction, recording of. Although s. 370 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers a Presidency Magistrate to record a brief statement of his reasons for his conviction instead of a judgment, this must be done in such a manner that the High Court in revision may be in a position to judge whether there were sufficient materials before him to support the conviction. Where a Presidency Magistrate convicted and sentenced the accused to a term of imprisonment under ss. 61 and 74 of Bengal Act VII of 1878 but did not in his judgment give either the substance or a summary of the evidence and there was nothing on the record to show that the accused had been previously convicted, the High Court set aside the conviction on the ground that the judgment was defective. TOOLSEY KAHARIN v. sentenced them each to 21 days' rigorous imprisonment, he recorded evidence very meagrely. Held, that under s. 262 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it was not obligatory on the Magistrate to record evidence in this case; that the "brief statement of reasons for conviction" recorded by the Magistrate under s. 370 (i) of the Criminal Procedure Code was sufficient in this case to satisfy a Court of Revision that there were materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction. *EMAMDU v. 10. ——— Appointment of a pleader to act as Presidency Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 557. The appointment of a pleader to act as a Magistrate is not forbidden by s. 557 or any other provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898). After the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898 had come into force, a practising pleader was appointed to act as a Presidency Magistrate. On his appointment he gave up practising, and was not practising at the time the accused was tried and convicted by him of theft. The accused applied to the High Court in revision to quash the conviction, on the ground that the appointment of the Magistrate contravened the provisions of s. 557 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, that s. 557 of the Code does not deal with appointments, and had no application to the present case, as the Magistrate was not practising at the time the accused was tried and convicted. In re JIVANJI ADAMJI

The plaintiff owned a certain house at Bombay. He let it out to a tenant on a monthly tenure. The tenant used the premises for his press, machinery and stock which he had mortgaged to his creditor, before he entered into a contract by way of lease with the plaintiff. Subsequently the mortgagee brought a suit in the High Court upon his mortgage and under the Court's order the Official Receiver took possession of the machinery and stock on the plaintiff's premises. Before the suit in the High Court the plaintiff had given to the tenant a notice to quit. Later on he gave another notice to the Receiver that he was going to charge him rent from a particular date. On failure of the Receiver to pay rent, the plaintiff, with the permission of the High Court, brought a suit against him in the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, for the recovery of the rent, or, in the alternative, for compensation for use and occupation. The suit was dismissed by the Court on the ground that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and defendant, who, as Receiver, was merely a custodian appointed by the Court and that his appointment did not affect the rights of the contracting parties. Against the said decision the plaintiff applied to the High Court under the extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi requiring the defendant to show cause why the decision should not be reversed. Held, discharging the rule, that the plaintiff could not succeed in the suit. Per BEAMAN, J.—Courts in the exercise of superintending powers will not ordinarily interfere except in cases of grave and otherwise irreparable injustice. *ISMALJI v. under Chapter VII of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882); the Judge passed an order directing the defendant to vacate. The defendant applied under s. 38 of the above Act to the Full Court which declined to entertain the application. The defendant thereupon applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) and obtained a rule nisi requiring the plaintiff to show cause why the order should not be set aside. Held, discharging the rule, that an application under Chapter VII of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) does not come within the operation of s. 38 of the Act. A proceeding under Chapter VII results not in a decree but in an order. Therefore, the condition under which the Presidency Small Cause Court can interfere under s. 38 does not arise in a proceeding under Chapter VII of the Act. RAMKRISHNA v. HAJI DAWOOD (1907)

The question is one of fact and not of law and is not one which can be referred to the High Court under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. *EAST INDIAN AND ANGLO-INDIAN DEPOSIT AND LOAN SOCIETY v. It appeared that the father disappeared in 1870 and had not since been heard of. Held, that the onus was on the appellant to prove that his father survived the grandfather, failing which proof the share he claimed would go to the brother and sisters of the missing man as preferable heirs to the appellant. The grandfather's will being disputed, the distribution of his estate was referred to an arbitrator, who by his award made in 1888 reserved a share for the father of the appellant and his children. Held, that there was nothing in that fact or in the award which could be construed as evidence that the appellant's father was alive when the award was made; nor could it be regarded as an admission on the part of the other heirs, nor as a finding by the arbitrator that he was then alive, the reservation of a share for a missing man being only in accordance with Mahomedan law. *MOOLLA CASSIM v. s. 3—Animals—Cruelty to animals—Police, Bombay Town—Act XLVIII of 1860, s. 21—Railway Company—Master and servant—Criminal liability of master for his servant's acts—Goods yards of a railway—Public place. The Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company carried twenty-seven head of cattle from Talegaon to Bombay. These cattle were put in one truck by their owner under the supervision of the Company's goods clerk at Talegaon, and were so allowed to be put by the Company's servants at Talegaon in spite of a circular issued to them by the Traffic Manager to prevent the overcrowding of cattle. When the cattle were detrained at the goods yard of the Company at Wadi Bundar, they were found suffering from the effects of overcrowding. The Bombay Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals prosecuted the Railway Company under s. 21 of Act XLVIII of 1860 and s. 3 (b) of the Act for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (Act XI of 1890). The Presidency Magistrate, who tried the case, referred to the High Court the following two questions:—(i) Is the Company liable, under the above circumstances, for the acts of the owner of the cattle and the goods clerk at Talegaon under s. 3 (b) of Act XI of 1890, though they may have no knowledge as to how the animals were carried? (ii) Is the Wadi Bundar goods station a place accessible to the public, when the Company's orders are that men on business alone should be admitted there? The High Court answered the first question in the negative and the second in the affirmative. Act XI of 1890 is aimed at the individual who actually practises the cruelty, and it was not intended by the Legislature to make a master penally liable for the act of his servant done in the course of the servant's employment, and certainly not when the act is done contrary to the orders of the master. CAWASJI MERWANJI SHROFF v. 1. Proof of authority—Agent acting out of scope of authority. To hold a person bound by the acts of his agent, it must be shown that the agent acted within the scope of his authority. MUNOHUR DASS v. DEEN DYAL

BEER KISHORE SAHOY v. GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL . . . . .

17 W. R. 497

2. Effect of act done without authority—Signing document by unauthorized agent. The signature by an agent of a wajib-ul-arz from which the record of an important interest in property was omitted cannot be considered as a waiver of the right or claim unless he was properly authorized to sign it. IMAMBUNDEE v. BHUGWAN-DASS . . . . .

1 N. W. 41: Ed. 1873, 38

3. Suit against agent for account—Payments or advances to third parties—Proof of authority of agent. As a general rule, an agent or collector cannot discharge himself of moneys for which he is liable to account, by proving payments or advances to third parties, unless he can show that such payments or advances were made by the express authority of the principal, or with his knowledge and consent. FAGAN v. CHUNDER KANT BANERJEE . . . . .

7 W. R. 452

4. Implied authority of agent—Liability of Principal. When a person takes advantage of the management of his affairs by another, he must fulfil the engagements which that other has contracted in his name, provided such engagement be within the proper limits of the manager's authority, and be for the benefit of the estate. KOORA v. ROBINSON . . . . .

2 Agra Mis. 2

5. Holding out, by the principal, of the agent's authority. The right of a third party against the principal on the contract of his agent, though made in excess of the agent's actual authority, was nevertheless enforced where the evidence showed that the contracting party had been led into an honest belief in the existence of the authority to the extent apparent to him. RAM PERTAB v. MARSHALL . . . . .

I. L. R. 26 Cal. 701
3 C. W. N. 313

6. Evidence of authority—Policy of insurance. To prove the authority of an agent who underwrites a policy of insurance, it is not necessary, in order to charge his principal, that the instrument appointing such agent should be produced, if it is shown that he has been in the habit of underwriting policies for his principal, and that the latter has been in the habit of paying losses upon policies so subscribed. MULCHAND CHUTUMAL v. SUNDARJI NARANJI . . . . .

7 Bom. O. C. 39

7. General or special power of agent—Evidence of agency. Where the evidence goes to show that a particular person said to be the agent of the defendant was really his general agent, and did transact business of various kinds for his principal, it is unnecessary to prove any special power enabling him to enter into a particular contract of bargain and sale. Per MACPHERSON, J.—The extent and nature of the powers vested in an agent are not so much matter of law as matter of fact. If it be proved that a person acted ordinarily as an agent for the defendant in buying and selling articles of merchandise, the fact of his not being proved to have previously purchased a particular kind of article, would not necessarily operate against the plaintiff's case. The Court, in deciding the question of agency, must look to the general evidence on the record. RAM BAKS LAL v. KISHORI MOHUN SHAHA

3 B. L. R. A. C. 273: 12 W. R. 130

8. Factors, shipments by—Consignees—Custom of Calcutta. Factors having an interest by reason of their advances in their principal's goods, are justified in shipping those goods for sale, either "on account of those concerned," or "on account of themselves," unless their general authority was controlled by instructions from their principal or by contract. The evidence failing to show that any particular usage or custom qualifying the law of England as between principal and factor prevails in Calcutta. Held, that the powers and duties of the factors in making consignments of their principal's goods must be determined by the general mercantile law. Factors entrusted with possession of their principal's goods, and having advanced upon them, shipped the goods to London, drawing bills against them in their own names, and selling the bills with the shipping documents in the market. The acceptance of the factors' bills by the consignees, and the delivery of the shipping documents to them, made them the pledgees, but did not alter the character of the transaction, which was one whereby the factors had pledged the goods for the payment of bills on which they (and not the principal) were liable as drawers for an amount exceeding the value of the goods. In such a case no privity exists between the consignees and the undisclosed principal. Held, therefore, that, a loss having occurred on the shipments, the principal was liable to the factors' estate for the full amount of re-drafts representing that loss, although the factors had become insolvents, and had in fact paid only a small dividend on the redrafts. *MIRTUNJOY CHUCKERBUTTY v. out authority, it was necessary, in order to deprive the transaction of the protection given by the 1st section of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, and to bring it within the proviso of the 3rd section, that the jury should find categorically that the lender had notice of the agent's malá fides or want of authority. To prove such notice, it was sufficient to show that the circumstances attending the transaction were such as that a reasonable man, and a man of business, applying his understanding to them, would certainly infer that the agent had not authority to make the pledge or that he was acting malá fide in respect thereof against his principals. GOBIND CHUNDER SEN v. 10. ————— Banian—Del credere agent—
Dealings between Native and European firm. G S & Co. employed R to make purchases for them in the bazar, upon orders which were in force for two days, and they imposed restrictions on R's authority to pledge their credit, which were not made known to those with whom he dealt. His remuneration was to be certain dustooree on the purchases, and he paid and gave receipts for the jute, as agents for G S & Co. He furnished accounts specifying the price of the goods and the expenses incurred by him upon them, and upon being paid he affixed his receipts to them. The purchases were unusually large and in R's books G S & Co. were debited with the amount paid for the goods, R retaining no interest in, or profit out of, it. J S, one of the vendors to R, sued G S & Co. for the price of some of the goods so purchased by R. Held, that a general authority implies all powers necessary, or usual or proper, as means to effectuate the purposes for which it was created. A banian is a del credere agent with regard to his employer in making purchases, and is a principal with reference to third persons. Held, also, that a person who has been allowed to represent himself as agent of a merchant under a general authority is not as such a banian; that when a native dealer makes purchases for a European house, the presumption is that the vendor gave credit to the native dealer; and that goods having been purchased for an employer and entered to his debit, and receipts given for them in his name, raises no presumption that the buyer was a banian. GRANT, SMITH & Co. v. JUGGOBUNDUO SHAW. Bourke A. O. C. 17: 2 Hyde 301

the agent exceeded his authority in such a manner as to exempt the principal from liability upon the contract. 12. ————— Taking advances.

A native lady, possessing an estate in a district in which she did not reside, opened an account with a banker, through her son, as agent, to provide for the punctual payment of Government revenue and to meet current expenses. Held, that such a course of dealing did not of itself warrant the banker in advancing to the son, as the accredited agent of his mother, large sums of money on bonds. MISRAIN v. 22. ——— Suit for goods sold and delivered to wife after separation. 23. ——— Right of agent to sue—Suit by wife's constituted attorney—Lunatic—Act XXXV of 1858. D sued in the Mamlatdar's Court, as A's constituted attorney, for an injunction restraining the defendants from causing any obstruction to his possession of certain lands. The land belonged to A's husband, who was alleged to be a lunatic, but there was no adjudication of his lunacy, nor was A appointed a manager of his estate under Act XXXV of 1858. Held, that D had no right to sue. A, not having been appointed a manager of her husband's estate, had herself no right to sue in respect of a disturbance of her husband's possession. She could not therefore authorize her agent to sue on her behalf. NEMAVA v. DEVANDRAPPA. I. L. R. 15 Bom. 177

24. ——— Gomashta, power of—Contract through broker. N sued J S & Co. for damages occasioned by the inferiority of certain goods, which he alleged that he bought of them on a verbal contract made by his gomashta M through his broker F. which had not been complied with, and was made by K, one of the plaintiffs' gomashtas, by the pen of J, one of their brokers, whom R had authorized to sign the contract. The Court below found that K was N's gomashta, but could not as such depute a third party to sign a contract for N, and judgment was given for the plaintiffs. On appeal:—Held, that a gomashta has a general authority to manage his employer's business, not as a mere agent, but with power to do all acts necessary for carrying it on, and to authorize brokers to make contracts. A broker authorized to sign a particular contract is not authorized to sign it if it contain a stipulation unknown to his employer, and vice versa. JARDINE SKINNER & Co. v. NATHORAM. Bourke A. O. 25. ——— Gomashta employed to collect rents—Power to distrain—Ratification. A gomashta employed to collect rents is not authorized to distrain unless he has been expressly authorized by power-of-attorney. Therefore if a gomashta, without such express authority, distrain for rent due, or pretended to be due, to his principal, his principal is not bound by his acts, unless he ratify them, as, for example, by receiving the proceeds of the distress, knowing they had been obtained by distress. *RAMJOY MUNDUL v. 27. ——— Authority to sue on behalf of principal. In a suit, under Act X of 1859, where plaintiff sues as a gomashta of the zamindar, it is not necessary that a power-of-attorney or any other formal document conferring a special power on the plaintiff should be produced, if it is proved from the evidence that he filled that character. *MADHO SINGH v. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—contd.*1. AUTHORITY OF AGENTS—contd.

35. ——— Agent of owner of estate—Lease by agent—Fraud and collusion—Ratification. In a suit to set aside a lease as granted without authority by an agent to the defendant, who was the naib of the estate, and as procured by fraud by the defendant in collusion with the agent, the latter charge of collusion having been withdrawn at the hearing before the Subordinate Judge, the High Court remarked on the impropriety of presenting a plaint charging collusion between the agent and defendant without good grounds for such imputation, and on the withdrawal of such charge at the hearing if there were grounds for it; and agreed with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the owner of the estate in issue must be presumed to know what was being done on her behalf by her agent. The presumption is that a man acts rightly and not fraudulently. The mere circumstance that the rents were low does not give rise to the presumption that there had been fraudulent conduct on the part of the naib, or that he did not state the circumstance to the agent before obtaining the lease from him. There is also this difference between this case and other cases in which contracts between principals and agents are sought to be set aside on the ground of good faith, that here another agent is interposed, and it is not the case of the defendant (the naib) making a report to the owner in England. Even supposing the original transaction liable to be set aside, the ratification by a person having authority from the owner to make inquiries and ratify what had been done would render it invalid. ANNUND CHUNDER BOSE v. 38. ——— Headman of village—Acts of, to bind co-sharers. Held, that to make the acts of the headmen of a village in boundary disputes and other matters binding on the co-sharers it is not necessary that there should be specific authority by power-of-attorney or otherwise, or subsequent express or implicit assent or sanction in absence thereof. Requisite authority may be inferred from the facts of each case by showing that the headman of the village have usually in similar disputes been permitted to act and represent for the other sharers.

39. — Agent in survey of land—Thakbust map—Act of agent—Endorsement—Evidence. In a suit for possession of certain lands, for rectification of a thakbust map, and reversal of an Act X decision, the plaintiffs obtained a decree in the Court of first instance, the lower Appellate Court, and subsequently in the High Court on appeal. It appeared that the lower Courts had before them an incorrect copy of the thakbust map, the original forming part of the record of another suit. The High Court on appeal refused to send for this map, but subsequently, on review, it was sent for. There was an endorsement on the back, which did not appear on the copies originally before the Court, to the effect that the lands in dispute were pointed out by one T C acting as agent for the plaintiffs, to be measured as belonging to the defendant's talukh. Held, that the case must be remanded to the lower Appellate Court to determine (i) whether T C was the agent of the plaintiff; (ii) whether, acting within the scope of his authority as such agent, he did sign the map as a correct map and pointed out the lands as belonging to the defendant; (iii) and if so, how far these acts of the agent were binding on the plaintiffs. *SUDAKHINA CHOWDHRAIN v. 41. — Power-of-attorney—Option of agent to accept service of summons. A person holding a power-of-attorney, even if authorized by the power to appear and defend suits on behalf of his principal, is at liberty to refuse to accept service of summons and appear in a suit brought against his principal, but may either act upon the power or not, as he may think proper. *In the matter of the petition of LUCHMEE CHUND I. 44. — Mooktear appointed by several co-sharers—Authority of agent—Evidence of general authority. Where a general mooktear empowered to act on behalf of co-sharers does formal acts to enforce the rights of his principals (the zamindars), it is not necessary to trace back his authority in each case to the explicit sanction of every single member of the family. Mooktears must be considered to have a certain discretion, and, unless the contrary is shown, to do such acts as come within the ordinary scope of their duty with authority. HURRY KISTO ROY v. MOTEE LALL NUNDEE . 14 W. R. 36

45. — Authority to sign deed of sale—Proof of authority of agent. Where a man resists liability for a deed of sale executed by his am-mooktear, it is necessary for the purchaser claiming under that deed to show that the mooktear had authority either by virtue of a general or special power-of-attorney to execute that deed and to bind his principal by executing that deed. *MOHAN KOORER v. 46. — Pardanashin woman—Account stated. A mooktearnama executed by a pardanashin woman appointed her husband to be her general mooktear, and declared that "all acts done by the said mooktear, such as giving and taking loans to and from others, executing on my behalf, getting executed in my favour, deeds of absolute sale," and so on, "shall be accepted by me." It was sought to render the principal liable, on an account stated by her husband as her mooktear so empowered, for a debt, without proof that the money constituting it had been borrowed on her account. Held, on the construction of the mooktearnama, that the mooktear had no authority to bind her by such a statement of account, whatever authority he might have had to bind her by an actual borrowing of money on her behalf. No implication of authority in the mooktear to bind the woman by his stated account had arisen from the carrying on of a course of business. Accordingly, when the evidence of express authority failed, the statement of account by the mooktear was insufficient to render the principal liable. No

48. ———— Partner of firm—Knowledge of person dealing with partner—Contract incapable of division. A firm of carriers authorized one of their partners to draw bills on the firm to the extent of R200 each. The partner, acting in excess of his authority, and without the knowledge of the firm, made two promissory notes, in the name of the firm, for R1,000 each. The plaintiff knew the partner was limited to a particular sum, but also knew that two of his bills for R300 each had been previously accepted by the firm. In an action on the notes:—Held, first, that the firm was not liable for the whole amount drawn; and, secondly, that the contract, whereon the action was founded, was not capable of division, and therefore the firm was not liable to the extent of R200. PREMABHAI HEMABHAI v. BROWN 10 Bom. 319

49. ———— Partnership in tea garden—Liability of partner for acts of managing partner—Authority of agent. By an agreement made on 22nd July 1862 between C and T (since deceased) and the defendants P and S, C agreed to sell, and T, P, and S to purchase, a half share in the lands, plantation and estate belonging to C, known as the Laojan Tea Estates and Grants. The agreement provided that C was to conduct and manage all matters and affairs of the estates, but nothing was said as to its being done in his own name or in that of the partners of any firm. Money to carry on the business was provided by means of bills drawn by the local manager upon C in the same manner as if he (C) had been the sole owner, the defendants being fully aware of this and finding the funds. This mode of dealing continued down to the time of the transaction, which is the subject of this suit. The only act in the way of notice to the public on the part of the defendants was a notification in a directory published by them in Calcutta (T, S & Co. being book-sellers and publishers), in which in the list of tea estates the Laojan concern was mentioned, and C, T, P, and S named as proprietors. In the directory for 1870 and 1872 C was also described as Calcutta agent. This suit was brought to recover a balance due in respect of moneys alleged to have been advanced by the plaintiffs on the tea to be manufactured in the season 1872, the plaintiffs being tea brokers who made the advances on the security of tea invoices and bills of lading. The terms on which the required advances were to be made were arranged by an agreement, dated 9th February 1872, between C and the plaintiffs, who were under the belief that C was the proprietor of the Laojan concern and not merely manager. By reason of C's death and the non-delivery of a portion of the season's tea, the plaintiffs were unable to reimburse themselves for their later advances, and brought the present suit against the defendants, who, they contended, were bound by all C's acts and dealings. Held, by COUCH, C.J., that, assuming that the plaintiffs knew what was in the directory, it could not be considered as a notice to them that the authority which C had been exercising, and which he continued to exercise with, so far as it related to bills and drafts drawn by the local manager, the knowledge of his partners, the defendants, had been determined, and that he had only the authority of an ordinary Calcutta agent. Held, also, that the question in the case was whether the transaction between C and the plaintiffs was within the scope of the authority which C had, or was allowed by his partners to appear to have, in managing and conducting the affairs and business of the partnership. It was a question of actual or apparent authority, and whether the transaction was one which the owner of a tea garden carrying on the cultivation of it would in the ordinary course of business enter into. Held, further, that the transaction would have been according to usage if C had been the sole owner of the gardens, and the defendants, by allowing him to manage ostensibly as sole owner clothed him with every authority incidental to a sole owner in that business. The defendants were therefore bound by the agreement of the 9th February 1872. SPINK v. MORAN 21 W. R. 161

Under the articles of association of the Baree Tea Company, N & Co. had power to "draw, accept, indorse, and negotiate on behalf of the company all such cheques, promissory notes, drafts, etc., as should be necessary for enabling them to carry on the business of the company." Purporting to act under this power, N & Co. drew a bill of exchange on the managing agents of the company, which was accepted by the latter, and indorsed by N & Co. to the Oriental Bank Corporation, who credited the amount to N & Co.'s general account. The amount was drawn out by cheques drawn by N & Co. personally without reference to the Baree Tea Company, and there was no proof that the money

53. — Agent acting out of scope of authority—Liability of principal. Held, that an agent who is appointed for the general management and conduct of business cannot bind his principal by an unusual contract, not strictly relating to the conduct of the business, unless he has express or implied authority for the same. The fact that a consignor dealt in good faith with the agent, who exceeded his authority, is not sufficient to bind the principal. The consignor dealing with the agent ought to satisfy himself of the agent's authority. The defendant, not having ratified his agent's act by receiving the benefit of the contract, cannot be bound by the acts of his agent and liable to make good the losses. MUDAREE LALL v. GILMORE 3 Agra 196

54. — Payment to agent in belief he was principal—Liability of purchaser. Where a party purchased cotton from a person both banker and broker, upon the just belief authorized by the facts that he (the seller to him) was the principal and not merely a broker, and paid him in good faith the price of the article purchased, he cannot be held liable to the real principal's claim, such payment protecting him from further liability. PETUMBER BHUGUTT v. 55. — Suit brought by agent for principal—Dismissal of suit brought by agent in his principal's name—Amendment of plaint—Court, power of. A Court in which a suit is brought on behalf of one person through the agency of another, is entitled to inquire as to the agent's authority. A suit for arrears of rent was brought by an agent, professing to act under authority from his principal. The plaintiff, after instituting the suit in his own name as agent, obtained an order from the Court granting him leave to amend the plaint by substituting the name of his principal as plaintiff, suing through him, an amendment which the defendant resisted disputing the authority of the agent. Held, that the Court in allowing it did not decide that the agent had authority: that remained to be proved; and as it was not proved, the suit failed. NAM NARAIN SINGH v. Plaintiff was given authority to sign, conduct suits and do other acts on behalf of the executants; and the document was held to be an authority coupled with an interest and irrevocable. Plaintiff now sued in his own name to recover certain property belonging to the devasom and which had been demised on kanom prior to the date of plaintiff's authority. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The plaintiff contended that the mortgages had become effectual as against the defendant by reason of his subsequent conduct. Evidence was given that he had promised his adoptive mothers to redeem the mortgages, and that he had stood by and allowed the plaintiff to carry out the provisions of the mortgage-deeds to his own detriment by paying maintenance to the defendant's adoptive mothers, and by paying off certain mortgages which had been created by them previously to the adoption of the defendant. Held, that the defendant was not liable upon the mortgages. His promise to redeem the mortgages was not made to the plaintiff, but to his adoptive mothers and there was no consideration for such promise as he made. Nor could the promise have the effect of ratification, for the ratification of the authorized contract of an agent can only be effectual when the contract has been made by the agent avowedly for or on account of the principal, and not when it has been made on account of the agent himself. *SHIDDESHVAR v. —Mortgage by lambardar—Acquiescence in acts of agent. Where a mortgage was made by a lambardar of his own share and shares of his co-sharers as agent on their part in order to raise a sum required to pay the Government revenue:—Held, that the co-sharers being aware of the fact of mortgage, and not having at the time repudiated it, and, moreover, having acquiesced in the decree of the Court of first instance which awarded their shares on payment of their quota of the mortgage-debt and interest, must be taken to have thereby consented to the act of the lambardar which was done on their behalf. *PUNCHUM SINGH v. The plaintiffs alleged that they supplied the bamboos to the second defendant on his representing that he was acting under the orders of the Assistant Collector and the Mamlatdar. The first defendant denied that Government had ever authorised the purchase of the bamboos, and the second defendant denied that he had made the alleged representation. The lower Court passed a decree against the first defendant. On appeal to the High Court: Held, (reversing the decree), that there was no evidence

6. ——— Ratification—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 198, 211, 216—Suit for adjustment of accounts. The defendants as agents for the plaintiff entered into certain contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery. The defendants discharged these contracts by means of goods of their own and when subsequently the plaintiff sent on grain to the defendants to meet these contracts the defendants sold the plaintiff's grain at a profit. The defendants did not inform the plaintiff either that they had fulfilled the contracts with their own grain or that they had resold the plaintiff's grain at a profit. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to whatever profit was realized by the defendants on this latter transaction. Held, also, that where on a direction by the principal to his agents to purchase grain for him, the agent sold to him their own grain at a price higher than the prevailing market rate, the principal was entitled to repudiate the transaction and could not be alleged to have ratified it in the absence of knowledge that the agents were selling their own property and were charging him in excess of the market rate. *DAMODAR DAS v. 1. ——— Agency of manager—Revocation by one of several shareholders. A principal can determine the authority given to an agent. The defendant subsequently revoked this authority, and the plaintiff shortly afterwards found a purchaser, whose offer the defendant did not accept. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover on the agreement, which had not been performed on his part; that there was no ground for holding that the plaintiff and the defendant were partners in the transaction as between themselves; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for work done as broker, or for commission, the nature of the agreement being that the plaintiff

3. ———— Hereditary agency—Contract—Consideration—Specific performance—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 202, 203. The defendant, by an agreement in the nature of a letter of attorney, constituted the plaintiff and his descendants the hereditary agents of the defendant, gave him authority to collect the rents of his share in an inam village, and promised to pay him an annual salary out of the rents. Held, that, as between the parties and during their lifetime, the appointment was valid and binding whether or not any valuable consideration passed, the mere acceptance of the office by the plaintiff being a sufficient consideration or the appointment. But, independently of the terms of the agreement, and whether or not the agency had been created for valuable consideration, the defendant had, under the general provisions of s. 203 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), a right to revoke the authority, as the mere arrangement that the plaintiff's salary should be paid out of the rents could not be regarded as giving to the plaintiff an interest in the property, the subject-matter of the agency, within the meaning of s. 202. If the defendant had revoked the agency improperly, the remedy lay, under ordinary circumstances, in a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract. Where, however, the plaintiff chose to sue for specific performance, and demanded arrears of salary : —Held, that, without a valuable consideration for the defendant's promise, the agreement passed by him to the plaintiff would be nudum pactum, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover, except for work and services actually rendered. *VISHNUCHARYA v. 4. ———— Revocation of authority—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 201, 202, 203—Agent—Interest of agent in property—Exercise of authority, so as to bind principal. The plaintiff received instructions by letter from the defendants to purchase cotton on their behalf. This letter was received by the plaintiff before a telegram sent by the defendants the next day revoking the order reached him. The plaintiff replied by letter stating that the telegram had arrived too late, and that the purchase had already been made. In fact, the plaintiff had merely appropriated to the defendants a contract entered into by himself with a third party the day before the defendants' order reached him. Held, that the telegram was a revocation of the order contained in the letter of the previous day. Held, further, that the plaintiff had no such interest in the subject-matter of the agency as to prevent its termination; nor had he exercised his authority so as to bind his principal, no contractual relation with any third person having been created before the receipt of the telegram. *LAKHMI-CHAND RAMCHAND v. ## 4. DUTY OF AGENTS TO ACCOUNT.

1. ———— Form of account—Right to inspect books. Per FIELD, J.—It is the duty of an agent to render proper accounts to his employer irrespective of any contract to that effect. And he does not discharge that duty by merely delivering to his employer a set of written accounts without attending to explain them, and produce the vouchers by which the items of disbursements are supported. In order to enable an agent to prepare accounts to be furnished to his principal, he should be allowed to have reasonable access, at proper times and in the presence of responsible persons, to such books and papers in the principal's possession as may be necessary for the preparation of the accounts. *ANNODA PERSAD ROY v. 3. 5. Right of person dealing with agent personally liable—Suit and judgment recovered against agent—Subsequent suit against agent barred—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 233. The obligee under a hypothecation-bond brought a suit thereon against one who, upon the face of the instrument, contracted as obligor, but whom, when the suit was instituted, the plaintiff knew to have acted as agent in the transaction for a third person. Having obtained a decree, he satisfied it in part by attachment of a sum of money, and next caused the hypothecated property to be sold, and purchased it himself. Upon attempting to obtain possession, he was successfully resisted by the principal debtor under the hypothecation-bond, on the ground that the latter was the real owner of the property, and that the decree-holder had derived no title thereto from his judgment-debtor. He then sued the principal debtor to recover the balance remaining due upon the bond, after giving credit for the amount recovered by attachment in the suit against the agent. Held, that the plaintiff, having elected to hold the agent responsible upon the contract, and having obtained judgment and decree against him and written up full satisfaction of the decree, could not afterwards maintain a suit against the principal in respect of the same subject-matter. *Priestly v. 6. Carriage of goods by railway—Goods passing over the lines of several companies—Agreement for interchange of traffic—Loss of goods—Liability. The plaintiff delivered to the Madras Railway Company a bale of cloth for carriage from B, a station belonging to that company, to S, a station belonging to the defendants, the G. I. P. Railway Company, and obtained from the Madras Company a receipt which recited that it was granted, "subject to the rules and regulations and charges in force on that or any other railway over which the goods might pass." The goods were lost while on the line and in the charge of the defendants, the G. I. P. Railway Company, and the plaintiff sued them for damages for breach of the contract of carriage. Between the two railway companies there existed an agreement arranging for the interchange of traffic, which provided, inter alia, that goods should be booked through to and from all stations on both lines at certain stated rates; that in such cases one company should receive payment and should account to the other; that any claim for loss or damage should be paid by the company in whose custody the goods were when lost or damaged, or if that could not be ascertained, then by both companies rateably; and that no alteration affecting the through traffic should be made by either company without previous notice to the other. The defendants pleaded that the suit was wrongly brought against them, as there was no contract between themselves and the plaintiff. Held, that the suit, whether or not it might also have been brought against the Madras Railway Company, was rightly brought against the defendants inasmuch as the agreement between the two companies, if it did not actually constitute a partnership between them, showed at least that the Madras Railway Company became the agents of the defendants to make the contract for carriage with the plaintiffs. G. I. P. RAILWAY COMPANY v. RADHAKISAN KHUSALDAS. I. L. R. 5 Bom. 371

7. Undisclosed principal—Settlement of accounts between principal and agent—Right of unpaid vendor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 231, 232. The defendant, who resided in Dholera, employed the firm of S K as his agents in Bombay. A running account was kept, in which the defendant was debited with the price of goods purchased on his account by S K, and was credited with the price of goods sold by S K on his account and with the amount of the remittances which he made from time to time. In fulfilment of orders received from the defendant on 16th March 1879, S K, on the 23rd March 1879, bought from the plaintiff 20,000 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 42,000 then lately arrived at Bombay); on the 24th March, 1879, 10,160 cocoanuts (out of cargo of 23,000); and on the 27th March, 26,626 cocoanuts (out of a cargo of 71,250). By each of these three contracts it was agreed that the purchase-money should be paid on delivery. At the time of making these contracts the plaintiff did not know, nor had he any reason to suspect, that S K was an agent and not principal, in the transactions. On the 27th and 28th March 1879 the 30,160 cocoanuts (the subject-matter of the first two contracts) were transhipped into the vessel Lakhmiprasad, and on the 29th March 1879, the 26,626 cocoanuts (the subject-matter of the third contract) were transhipped into the vessel Lalsari for conveyance to Dholera. The Lalsari sailed from Bombay on the 31st March, and on her arrival at Dholera the defendant obtained possession of the third lot of 26,626 cocoanuts which had been shipped on board. On the 1st April, S K received from the defendant remittances sufficient to pay for all the cocoanuts, and to leave a balance of Rs. 1,727 to the credit of the defendant in his account with S K. These remittances were made by the defendant in good faith, and were received by S K at a time when the plaintiff gave credit to S K, and did not know of any one else to be charged with the price of the cocoanuts. On the 2nd April the firm of S K stopped payment, and on the 3rd April 1879 the plaintiff, in consequence of the failure of S K and the non-payment of the price of the cocoanuts, transhipped the 30,160 cocoanuts (the subject of the first two contracts) from the Lakhmiprasad into the Ramprasad. These cocoanuts were subsequently sold, and the proceeds of the sale deposited in the Bank of Bombay to abide the result of this suit. On the 4th April the plaintiff discovered that the defendant was the principal in the cocoanut transaction, and brought this suit against him to recover the price of the three lots of cocoanuts. The defendant denied that S K had authority to pledge his (defendant's) credit in making purchases, and contended that, having in good faith paid his agent S K for the cocoanuts prior to the institution of the suit, he (the defendant) was not liable to the plaintiff. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The rule of English law, which makes the liability of an undisclosed principal subject to the qualification that he has not bona fide paid the agent, or that the state of accounts has not been altered, is not adopted in the Contract Act. S. 232 is to be read as a qualification of the first portion of paragraph 1 of s. 231, which gives a principal a general right to enforce a contract entered into by his agent. S. 232 qualifies that general right by making it subject to the rights and obligations subsisting between the agent and the other contracting party. The second clause of paragraph 1 of s. 231 gives a party contracting with an agent the same rights against the principal only as he would have had against the agent; and s. 234 adds a further qualification to his rights as against the principal. S. 232 of the Contract Act adopts the qualification imposed by English law upon the right of the principal to enforce a contract, viz., that he must take the contract subject to all the equities, in the same way as if the agent were the real principal; but it does not impose upon the right of the other contracting party the qualification laid down by the cases of Thompson v. Davenport, 2 Smith's L. C. 7th Ed. 364, and Armstrong v.

Stokes, L. R. 7 Q. B. 598, namely, that the principal has not paid the agent, or that the state of the account between the principal and agent has not been altered to the prejudice of the principal. The only qualification to the right of the other contracting party against the principal is that imposed by s. 234, namely, that he has not induced the principal to act upon the belief that the agent only will be held liable. *PREMI TRIKAMDAS v. 13. ——— Bankruptcy of agent, effect of—Breach of contract—Damages—Amendment of bill of complaint. This was a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage for Rs. 50,000 during a certain contract which, the plaintiffs contended, had determined by the bankruptcy of their Calcutta agents. The defence was that the contract was not so determined; and that, even if it were, the defendant had a right of lien or set-off, which would cover the amount of the advances. This set-off consisted of the amount of loss in the sale of silk which the defendants, after the said bankruptcy, had shipped direct to London, and sold there on non-acceptance by the plaintiffs; and of a claim of R18,024, the amount of a bill of the said agents which the defendant had accepted from them as payment for silk, but which bill was dishonoured after the said bankruptcy. Cl. 6 of the agreement was as follows: "The silk to be paid for on delivery. Delivery to be taken within ten days of the arrival of any parcel in Calcutta; failing the payment within that time, Carr, Tagore & Co. may sell it at the market price; and should this be under the contract rate, you agree to pay the difference." Cl. 10 of the agreement was as follows: "As you have no authority to make advances previous to the receipt of the silk, and as Carr, Tagore & Co. stipulate for the advance in part of the sum which they are out of pocket, to carry on the filatures, the advances proposed being R50,000, at such times and in such portions as they may require after the delivery of the first parcel of silk under this contract, so that such advances shall not at any time be in excess of R50,000, beyond the silk delivered, for which interest at the rate of 6 per cent. will be allowed, and it is agreed that the question of advances shall be an open question; and that, in the event of advances being authorized, the contract shall at once be in force." The lower Court held that under these two clauses the defendants could not resort to the advances for their set-off; that the plaintiffs were not liable for the R18,024; and that the contract was not determined. Plaintiff also alleged a series of frauds on the part of their agents, with whom defendants were in collusion, but these charges were abandoned at the hearing. Held, that acceptance by the agent binds the principal where there is no fraud; that voluntary acceptance of an agent's bill as payment discharges the principal; that a contract is not determined by death or bankruptcy of an agent, unless there has been an express stipulation to that effect; that an impossibility of fulfilling the terms of a contract must be clearly established in order to avoid a liability for breach thereof; that when a place of delivery is specified in a contract, delivery must be made there; that the plaintiff, having failed to prove alleged fraud in a deed, although entitled to relief under a distinct head of equity, will not be allowed to make a new case, and cannot, in the same suit, obtain a decree on the footing of the said deed; that amendment of a bill will not be allowed, if it appear that an account, being the relief attainable, would have been given if demanded, and that the plaintiff has not offered to perform his part of a contract and allow compensation for breaches thereof to the defendant and to pay any balance that should be found against him; that the mode of ascertaining damages for breach of contract prescribed in the contract must be adopted, and the remedy by action at once accrues. *POLE v. The first clause refers to the general case and the rule is that the third party shall have as against the undisclosed principal the same rights which he would have against the agent, if the agent had been the principal. The second clause deals with the particular case where the principal discloses himself before the contract is completed. The second clause should be read as governed by the first clause. The words "discloses himself" in s. 231 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) should be construed strictly. Per BATCHELOR, J. It has been warmly urged that the third party's right to repudiate, which is allowed, if the principal himself makes the disclosure, should not be refused merely because the disclosure is made by some other person or the information reaches him from some other source. But the argument to my mind is not convincing. For whatever may be the subjective belief or conviction of the third party, it is conceivable that he should have no right to avoid the contract, unless the principal, hitherto undisclosed, comes out into the open and claims the benefit of the contract for himself, and there would be no hardship in requiring the third party to challenge the alleged principal as to whether he makes this claim or not. *LAKSHMANDAS v. 8. ——— Liability in case of two innocent persons—Liability of agents to third parties—Forgery. Two letters were presented to M, one addressed to himself and the other to the manager of the Mussooree Savings Bank, both purporting to be written by K. In the letter to M, M was requested to deliver to the manager of the Bank the letter addressed to him. In the letter to the manager he was asked to send Rs. 2,500 in currency notes through M, payment being promised by a remittance through another bank or through M. M delivered the letter to the manager, who upon the strength of it made over the notes to M, who gave a receipt for them for and on behalf of K, and afterwards handed them over to the person who had brought him the letter. The letters were forgeries. In a suit against M by the Bank to recover the money paid to M :—Held, that, in presenting the letter, in receiving the notes, and in granting a receipt for them, the defendant was in some sense an agent of K; but, inasmuch as the notes were given on the authority of the letter addressed to the plaintiff himself, and not in consequence of any representation made by the defendant, the latter could not be held liable for the loss sustained by the former. *MOONEY v. 12. ——— Right to sue—Liability of agent—Charter party—Actual knowledge—Disclosure of name of principal at time of making the contract—Presumption of liability of agent where name of principal not disclosed—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230. The plaintiffs by charter-party contracted to let the steam-ship Oakdale to the defendants upon certain terms. The first clause of the charter-party stated that the plaintiffs "agreed as agents for owners of the said steam-ship," and subsequent clauses provided that the owners should bind themselves to receive the cargo on board, and that the master on behalf of the owners should have a lien on the cargo for freight, etc. The charter-party was signed by the plaintiffs and defendants in their own names. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for breach of the charter-party in refusing to load the said steam-ship. Held, that the plaintiffs had contracted as agents, and were therefore not entitled to sue. If a contract made by a person who is an agent is worded so as, when taken as a whole, to convey to the other contracting party the notion that the agent is contracting in that character, he cannot sue or be sued on the contract. Where one contracting party knows that the other is contracting as an agent for a third person whose name he also knows, the presumption laid down in cl. 2 of s. 230 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) does not arise, although at the time of making the contract the agent does not disclose the name of his principal. The essential point is the knowledge, and actual knowledge is equivalent to disclosure, the whole object of which would be to convey such knowledge. *MACKINNON, MACKENZIE & Co. v. ants let a steam-ship, to the plaintiff for a certain term, and signed a charter-party "by and on behalf of the owners of the steam-ship A." The charter-party was a time-charter to commence on arrival at Calcutta, and to terminate at one of certain ports; the steamer in the interim to ply to and from any port the charterers pleased. It was agreed that the steamer should be provided "with a proper and sufficient crew of seamen, engineers, stokers, firemen, and other necessary persons for working cargo with all despatch;" and that in taking and discharging cargo "the master and his crew with his boats shall be aiding and assisting to the utmost of their power;" and that "the owners or agents of the said steam-ship shall be held responsible to the said charterers for any incapacity, want of skill, insobriety, or negligence on the part of master, officers, engineers, stokers, firemen, or crew of the said steam-ship." The names of the principals were not disclosed in the charter-party, but were verbally disclosed before the charter-party was signed. In an action against the agents for damages for refusing to supply stevedores and other persons, in addition to the crew, when loading and discharging cargo:—Held, that the presumption created by the second clause of s. 230 of the Contract Act is merely a prima facie one and may be rebutted, and that the contract was not personally binding on the agents, because the prima facie presumption of an intention to contract personally was rebutted by the language of the contract itself. Held, also, that the terms of the charter-party showed that the crew only were to assist in loading and discharging cargo; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to call on those responsible for the steamer to load and discharge cargo by stevedores instead of by the crew. Reading the second part of s. 230 of the Contract Act with s. 92 of the Evidence Act, semble: that if, on the face of a written contract, an agent appears to be personally liable, he cannot escape liability by evidence of any disclosure of his principal's name apart from the contract. 14. — On 6th April 1865, A, who resided and carried on business at Bombay, through his gomastah at Calcutta, shipped on board the Sir Jamsetjee Family 268 bags of sugar, and received from the captain a bill of lading by which he certified that they were shipped in good order and well conditioned on board the said ship bound for Bombay, to be there delivered in like good order and well conditioned to B, or his assigns, on payment of freight at R16 per ton. The bill of lading was subject to the usual exceptions. The vessel was at the time chartered to H A, and C & C were agents for the owners. H A being unable to carry out the terms of the charter, there was a delay in the departure of the vessel. On 26th May 1865 A wrote to C & C, addressing them as agents of the ship: "I beg to inform you that I have shipped per Sir Jamsetjee Family 268 bags of sugar for Bombay; I hold the bills of lading for the same, and the ship is still detained here. I hope you will be kind enough to let me know what you will do about the cargo, if the said ship will sail for Bombay or tranship to any other vessel, or deliver the cargo here." To which C & C on the same day replied: "We shall be able to tell you in the course of a week or so what we propose doing with the ship Sir Jamsetjee Family; as soon as any thing has been decided, due notice shall be given to the shippers of cargo already on board." On 1st June C & C again wrote: "H A having failed to carry out his charter of the Sir Jamsetjee Family in terms of the shipping order and sundry goods having been sent on board by him, of which the following are believed to be to your order, and for which bills of lading have been signed and delivered to H A, we shall be glad to know whether you are willing that the said goods—268 bags of sugar—be transhipped to a steamer going to Bombay, at the current rate of freight, the bills of lading for the same being sent to the owners of the Sir Jamsetjee Family, to be delivered to the consignees of the goods upon production of the bills of lading already signed. You will, of course, understand that the goods are liable for the chartered rate, viz., R20-10 per ton; and the charterer having failed to complete the loading, the difference of freight between what H A granted you a shipping order at and the freight charged by the steamer will have to be paid by the shipper previous to the goods being delivered in Bombay." On the 5th June A replied: "I am agreed that my goods be transhipped to a steamer going to Bombay at the current rate of freight, but I must not pay the difference of freight, whatever it may be. In regard to H A, I have nothing to do with them, as the bills of lading per Sir Jamsetjee Family for 268 bags of sugar being signed by the captain of the same at the rate of freight, R16 per ton. I am liable for the same only. If you are willing to tranship my said goods to a steamer at the same rate of freight, I am willing and must pay it; otherwise you will kindly order to deliver my goods from Sir Jamsetjee Family here." C & C accepted and acted on the proposal in the last letter. The sugar was transhipped from the Sir Jamsetjee Family to the Gunga, from the mate of which C & C obtained a receipt, stating that the goods had been shipped in good order, etc. The goods were afterwards removed without the knowledge of C & C from the Gunga to another steamer, the Mula, which belonged to the same owners. Subsequently C & C gave up the receipt from the mate of the Gunga, and obtained in exchange a bill of lading signed by the agents for the captain of the Mula. The bill of lading stated the receipt of goods (in which were included those of A) from C & C, and made them deliverable to order of C & C, at Bombay, and receipt of freight for the whole at R15 per ton was admitted. A knew that his goods had been put on board the Mula and got his policy of insurance, which was against a total loss only, transferred. There were inserted in red ink in the bill of lading when given to A the words, "Bags all more or less in bad order and torn; contents damaged and rotten; marks indistinct; not responsible for marks or condition of packages or contents." The Mula proceeded on her voyage, but returned to Calcutta with her cargo damaged by the perils of the sea: 260 of A's bags of sugar were condemned and sold in Calcutta, under the authority of the agents of the Mula, without notice to C & C or to A, and neither were aware that the sale was about to take place. The remaining eight bags were sent to Bombay in another ship by the agents of the Gunga and Mula, and were received by A. Held (overruling PHEAR, J.), that C & C were agents only of the owners of the Sir Jamseljee Family; but had C & C been liable as agents for A, they would not have been liable for the full value of the goods damaged by the perils of the sea. Quære: If C & C had expressly, as agents of the owners of the Sir Jamseljee Family, contracted to tranship and deliver at Bombay, according to the terms of the bill of lading would they have been personally liable? Semble: A contract made with express reference to a principal, though not by name, would not render the agent personally liable as the agent of an undisclosed principal. *COWIE v. 15. — Agents of ship—Liability of agents. Upon the following fact referred "Defendants contracted with plaintiffs as agents of the captain and owners of a certain ship then in the Madras Roads. The plaintiffs were aware of this at the time when the contract was made. The captain was at the time in charge of his ship. At the time of the contract nothing was said by either party as to the person or persons on whose credit the contract was made,—all that occurred being that defendants known by plaintiffs to be acting as agents for the captain and owners of the ship, agreed with plaintiffs to carry certain of their goods on board the ship to Calcutta. The defendants did not at the time of the contract in terms say that they contracted only as agents. The plaintiffs did not know the names of the owners, nor the captain; nor had they any further or other knowledge of the latter than that which his designation by his office of master of the ship conveyed." Held, that, in the absence of anything more than knowledge that the defendants were acting as agents of the master and owners of a ship in the Roads, a decision declaring the agents liable was strictly in accordance with English law. *PATER v. The official instructions contained the following passage: "You will in all emergencies act as your discretion and judgment direct." At the same time, A sent a demi-official letter to B, in which, after several directions having reference to the disposal of the cargo, he added, "After getting all you can, I should think that the wreck ought to be burnt; but all is left to your discretion and judgment." In pursuance of these orders, the wreck was burnt without the consent of the owner. A subsequently ratified the act of his subordinate. Held, (i) that A, by the expressions used in the demi-official letter, rendered himself liable as principal; and (ii) that B, as the agent directly concerned in causing the burning of the ship, was liable jointly with A to the owner for the damage occasioned thereby. *ABDOOLA BIN SHAIK ALLY v. 17. — Fraud—Fraudulent agreement between agent and contractors for work. The ex-King of Oudh ordered M, one of his officers, to procure the erection of certain buildings. M made over to Y (also one of the King's officers) the contract for a portion of the work which the appellant undertook to execute. The contract for the work was signed by the appellant alone, and it provided (among other things) that Y was to be allowed R20,000 out of every R1,00,000 paid to the appellant. By another agreement it was stipulated that the work should be examined and checked by Y or his agents. The appellant was discharged before the completion of the work, and he sued Y, M, and the ex-King jointly. Held, that Y did not render himself personally liable, and that the contract was of such a description that the appellant was not entitled to a decree against the other respondents in respect of it, as both Y and the appellant were parties to a fraud on the ex-King. *BHOGOBAN CHUNDER SEN v. ## 7. COMMISSION AGENTS.

1. ——— Unauthorized profits of agent—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 215, 216—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Contemporaneous oral agreement—Account-sales. The plaintiffs, a firm of merchants, entered into an agreement (which was reduced to writing) with the defendants, who were dealers in coffee and other produce, to the following effect, viz., that all consignments of produce, which the defendants might make to Europe, should be made through the plaintiffs' firm; that the plaintiffs should receive a commission of 1 per cent. for themselves and 2½ per cent. for their agents at the port of consignment; that the plaintiffs should make certain advances to the defendants against the produce; and that the sums advanced should be repaid with interest "at such rates as may be fixed at the various dates of such loans, it being agreed that such interest is to be regulated by the then prevailing rate at the office of the Bank of Madras at Tellicherry." The written agreement was silent as to the mode of sale, rate of exchange, and other matters connected with the business; but it was at the same time further agreed orally that the sales of the defendants' produce were to be made under the directions and at the discretion of the plaintiffs. Business was carried on on the footing of the above agreements for eighteen months, during which period the plaintiffs furnished to the defendants copies of the account-sales for the consignments made through them, and they were accepted without objection by the defendants. The business resulted in the defendants becoming indebted to the plaintiffs; and about nine months after the date of the above-mentioned agreement the defendants executed in favour of the plaintiffs a mortgage in which the then amount of their indebtedness was recited. The defendants became further indebted to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs, having furnished them with an account of the transactions between them, now sued to recover the balance due. The defendants admitted the correctness of the debit side of the account, but denied in general terms that of the credit side. Evidence was given by the plaintiffs of the receipt of the account-sales in the ordinary course of business and of the delivery of copies to the defendants from time to time, and they were filed as exhibits without further proof. It appeared that in the account the defendants were charged on account of local exchange at a rate higher than that actually paid to the Bank, with which the plaintiffs had made a special arrangement without reference to the contract with the defendants. It also appeared that the plaintiffs, under an arrangement made with their agents at the ports of consignment, had received from them about 1 per cent. on the various consignments by way of return commission, and that this arrangement had not been communicated to the defendants. Held, (i) that the account-sales were prima facie proof of the transactions to which they related; (ii) that evidence of the contemporaneous oral agreement was admissible; (iii) that the defendants were not entitled to the benefit of the special arrangement between the plaintiffs and the Bank; (iv) that the plaintiffs were liable to the defendants for the amount received by them as return commission. MAYEN v. ALSTON. I. L. R. 16 Mad. 238

2. — Principal and Factor—Consignment for sale—Advance by factor on consignment—Right of factor to sell goods consigned to him for sale below the limit of price prescribed by consignor. In January 1889 an agreement was made between the plaintiffs and the defendant which provided that the defendant in Bombay was to act for the plaintiffs "in influencing consignments of produce" to the care of the plaintiffs in London. Such produce was to be sold by the plaintiffs in London for a certain commission and brokerage. One of the terms of the agreement was that the business in England was to be worked entirely in the defendant's name, and the defendant was to "undertake to guarantee the plaintiffs free of all loss in connection with the said consignments and to guarantee the payment of redrafts, etc." On the 25th January 1889 the defendant consigned 435 packages of cloves to the plaintiffs, in London and drew against the consignment a draft for £2,100 on the plaintiffs. In his consignment letter the defendant stated that the consignment was from his constituent C K, but that, as Rs30,000 had been advanced to him, the consignment was shipped in the defendant's name. The letter continued: "The cost is 9½d. per pound, but he expects more, and not to be sold under the above rate." The sum drawn against the cloves (£2,100) was £400 in excess of their value, and on receipt of the consignment letter on the 11th February 1889, the plaintiffs at once telegraphed to the defendant to remit by cable £400 against over-draft against cloves. On the next day the defendant replied by telegraph: "I will remit you by outgoing mail." The plaintiffs accepted and paid the draft for £2,100 drawn against the cloves. The price of cloves in the London market fell rapidly. The defendant from time to time lowered the limit of price, but not to such an extent as to allow of a sale being effected. The lowest limit named by him was 6d. per pound on the 31st October 1889. In December 1889 the market price was only 5d. per pound, and the deficit owing to the plaintiffs was £1,300. The plaintiffs presented bills to the defendant for this balance, but they were refused. On the 5th February 1890, after due notice to the defendant, the 435 bales of cloves were sold, 20 of them at 4½d. per pound and 415 at 4½d. The balance due to the plaintiffs in respect of this consignment after allowing for the proceeds of sale was £1,432-15-0. This sum was part of the amount for which the present suit was brought. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs were not justified in selling the cloves below the price limited, viz., 6d. per pound, and claimed to be credited with £329-1-8, which was the difference between the amount actually realized by the sale and the amount which would have been obtained if the cloves had been sold at the prescribed price. Held, by FARRAN, J., and by the Court of appeal on the evidence, (i) that the plaintiffs had accepted the consignment and had advanced money against it on condition of being kept in funds in case a deficit should arise owing to a falling market, and that the defendant acquiesced in that condition; (ii) that the plaintiffs had throughout claimed the right to sell if the condition was not observed, and that the defendant inferentially admitted the right claimed by the plaintiffs. The conclusion to be drawn was that the business was conducted on that basis, and that, when the condition was broken, the plaintiffs' right to sell arose according to the course of business, notwithstanding the limit of price imposed by the defendant. Per SARGENT, C.J.—The result of the authorities is to show that where a factor for sale, who has made advances, claims the right to sell, invito domino, the question is whether there was an agreement between the parties, either express or to be inferred, from the general course of business or from the circumstances attending to particular consignment, that the factor should under any and what circumstances have the power to sell against the wish of the owner of the goods. The onus of proving such agreement lies on the factor who has made the advances. Per FARRAN, J.—On the whole, the authorities warrant the inference that where goods are consigned to a foreign merchant as security for an advance, albeit he may be a factor entrusted with the sale of goods on commission, and where by reason of the fall in the market or other causes his security is declining in value, and becoming insufficient, such foreign merchant is invested with a power of sale over the goods after due notice to his principal, although the latter may place a limit on their sale, and desire to hold them on, if the principal do not put his factor in funds to make up the deficit so caused. JAFFERBOY LUDHABHOY CHATTOO v. CHARLESWORTH

3. ——— Agency to sell, coupled with interest—Contract Act, s. 202—Discretion as to price left with agent—Power of principal to impose limits as to price. The defendant consigned goods to a firm in London for sale, and in respect of each consignment he received an advance from the plaintiff, who was the agent of the London firm, and signed a consignment note, which contained the following passage: "I hereby authorize you to sell the above goods at the best price obtainable without reference to me, and I give you full discretion and power to act on my behalf to the best of your judgment in regard to such sale and in all matters connected with the management of this consignment. Should there be any short fall after realization of the above consignment, I hereby authorize you to draw on me for the amount, and I engage to honour such draft and to pay it on presentation." The plaintiff guaranteed the payment of the redrafts to the London firm, on whose account he made the advances to the defendant. Short falls having occurred on certain consignments and the London redrafts having been dishonoured, the plaintiff paid them, and now sued to recover the amount from the defendant. It appeared that consignments had been sold at prices less than certain limits which had been fixed by the defendant subsequent to the receipt of the advances and the signature of the consignment notes. Held, that the defendant had no right (regard being had to the terms of the consignment note and the course of dealing between the parties) so to impose limits of price, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. *KONDAYYA CHETTI v. 5. ——— Commission agents—Pakki adat system—Sale and purchase by the agent on his own account—Wagering contracts—Usage of trade—Tender of evidence as to delivery at other vaidas—Relevancy of such evidence. The defendant, a resident of the North-West Provinces, from time to time sent orders to the plaintiffs in Bombay to sell and purchase cotton on his account. The plaintiffs carried out the defendant's orders as they were received. Up to the due date they had purchased on behalf of the defendant 400 bales more than they had sold. It appeared that by reason of other contracts entered into with the merchants from whom they had purchased on behalf of the defendant the plaintiffs had 'cancelled' all these purchases before the due date. The defendant neither sent money to pay for the cotton nor did he direct the plaintiffs to sell on his behalf. The plaintiffs sued the defendant describing themselves as commission agents for their commission and for the loss on 400 bales sold on defendant's account. The plaintiffs were unable to show that they had paid any damages on account of the defendant, for failure to take delivery, to any of the merchants from whom they had purchased on defendant's account. The suit was dismissed in the lower Court on the ground that the contracts were wagering contracts. In appeal the plaintiffs contended that they were entitled as between themselves and the defendant to treat themselves as the principals, on the ground that the business was conducted on the pakki adat system, under which no privity was established between the defendant and the merchants to whom or from whom cotton was sold or bought on his account. Held, that, if the plaintiffs were, as their plaint stated, commission agents, and they were employed by the defendant as his commission agents, and as such, under instructions and on account of the defendant, entered into these purchases, they had no cause of action. Held, further, that the usage termed the pakki adat system involved a material departure from the ordinary relations between a principal and his agent of which there was no suggestion in the pleadings or issues, nor was there any evidence to prove it. The plaintiffs must therefore be held to the case they had made. During the course of the hearing in the lower Court it appeared that at the vaida, for which contracts in question had been made, the plaintiffs had neither given nor taken delivery of any cotton. They tendered evidence to show that at other vaidas they had given or taken delivery of cotton and other goods. The learned Judge rejected the evidence as irrelevant to the issue whether the contracts were wagering contracts. Held, on appeal, that the evidence tendered was relevant and should have been admitted. *CHANDULAL SUKLAL v. ## 1. LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL.

1. ———— Joint and several liability—Decrees against both parties. Where two parties are jointly and severally liable under the terms of a bond, the principal may be sued for the amount due with interest, notwithstanding that a decree has been obtained for the same sum against the other party. MAHOMED ROHEEMOODDEEN v. INDOOR CHUNDER JOWHUREE . . . . . 12 W. R. 192

2. ———— Remedy between principal and surety—Deficit in Collectorate treasury—Attachment of property by Collector. When on the discovery of a deficit in the deposit accounts of certain zamindars a Collector attaches the property of the sureties for the Collectorate treasurer, the remedy open to the sureties is against the treasurer only. SADUT ALI KHAN v. MANIKARNIKA CHOWDHRAIN. NUND MOHUN CHOWDHRY v. MANIKARNIKA CHOWDHRAIN . . . . . W. R. 1864, 119

3. ———— Right of surety who has paid the debt to recover from principal. Applying the law of England and Scotland and the general law of Europe to this country, it was held that, when a surety has paid off the debt of his principal, not only are all the collateral securities transferred to the surety, but by what is called subrogation, the right is also transferred to him to stand in the place of the original creditor, and to use against the principal debtor every remedy which the principal creditor himself could have used. Accordingly, the surety is not debarred from proceeding against the original debtor upon the instrument itself which created the debt, by reason of the debt having been paid by himself. HEERA LALL SAMANT v. OOOZEER ALI . . . . . 21 W. R. 347

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—contd.*2. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SURETY.

1. ———— Extent of liability—Voluntary payments by principal. The liability of a surety will not extend beyond the precise limits of his undertaking; he is not liable for any sum voluntarily paid by his principal to a third party for any purpose of his own. KHETTAR NATH SEAL v. SHIB NATH CHATTERJEE . . . W. R. 1884, 284

2. ———— Specific contract—Liability of surety—Costs of suing principal. Held, that a surety's liability must be measured by the contract; and where the contract is specific, and not in general and in definite terms, the surety cannot be held liable for costs and interest incurred in suing the principal debtor. DABEE CHURN v. JANKEE PERSHAD . . . 3 Agra 141

3. ———— Liability on bond—Running account—Appropriation of payments—Joint bond—Notice to surety of default. A principal and two sureties executed in favour of a bank a joint bond to secure the payment of sum placed to the cash credit loan account of the principal, together with interest, and the premia on a policy of life assurance within one year from the date of the bond. At the end of the year a considerable sum remained unpaid, but the principal continued dealing with the bank, and the account was continued for three years after the date of the bond as a running account, during which time divers sums were paid in by the principal, more than sufficient to discharge the amount due at the end of the first year from the date of the bond, and divers sums were in like manner drawn out. In a suit brought by the bank against the sureties to recover the amount due at the end of the first year, it was held that, inasmuch as the whole account from the date of the bond to the end of the principal's dealing with the bank had been treated as a running account, all payment made by the principal to the bank were to be appropriated to the earliest items in the account; and inasmuch as all the moneys due on the bond at the end of the first year were thereby satisfied, no amount remained due on the bond. Semble: That for the purpose of giving persons who appear on the face of an instrument to have executed it as principals the equitable rights of sureties, they may show by evidence dehors the instrument that they executed only as sureties. Semble: That a surety is not entitled to notice of default made by the principal. Semble: That there being no express stipulation to the contrary, the fact that the principal was allowed a greater credit than that secured would not have discharged the sureties. KOONDAN LALL v. JAHANS . . . 1 Agra 17

4. ———— Sale of mortgaged property in execution of money-decree obtained by first mortgagee—Effect on second mortgagee's rights—Purchase by one of several joint mortgagees of mortgaged property—Limitation—Suit for sale of mortgaged property. In January 1866 B obtained a simple money-decree only in a suit for enforcement of lien created by a bond executed by the wife of Z, and, at a sale in execution of such decree, a 10-biswas share hypothecated in the bond was sold and purchased by Z in November 1872. On the 3rd May 1872, two bonds were executed in favour of B and H jointly, the first by Z and I jointly hypothecating  $6\frac{1}{2}$  out of the above-mentioned 10 biswas and the second by S, in which the obligor promised to pay the obligees the amount of the bond given by Z and I in the event of such amount not being paid by them, and mortgaged certain property as security for such payment by him. In December 1872 Z gave another bond to B hypothecating the same 10 biswas, and in execution of a decree obtained by B upon this bond the 10 biswas were sold and purchased by B himself in 1877, and in 1883 were sold by him to D. Subsequently, B and H brought a suit against Z and I, the joint obligors, under the bond of the 3rd May 1872, the heirs of their surety S, a purchaser from those heirs of the property mortgaged in the security-bond, and D, in which they claimed to recover the money due on the bond by sale of the property mortgaged therein, and also by the sale of the property mortgaged in S's security bond. Held, that, inasmuch as the bond executed by S was only a guarantee for the personal obligation created by the joint bond of Z and I, and a cause of action could only accrue as against him in respect of the personal default of the joint obligors to pay the bond-money, and such default occurred beyond the period of limitation within which a suit to enforce the personal obligation to pay the money could have been maintained, it followed that, had there been a claim in the plaint to obtain a decree personally against the joint obligors, the plea of limitation by which such a claim could have been defeated would have been equally efficacious as regards the heirs of S; but no such claim had been made, and the obligation of surety under his bond of the 3rd May 1872 being confined to the personal default of S, his heirs had been wrongly imported into the present litigation, which alone sought to enforce the hypothecation of the joint bond against the hypothecated property. BHUP SINGH v. ZAIN-UL-ABDIN . . . I. L. R. 9 All. 205

5. ———— Contract Act, s. 187, illus. (c)—Surety-bond—Want of consideration. Where N advanced money to K on a bond hypothecating K's property and mentioning M as surety for any balance that might remain due after realization of K's property, M being no party to K's bond, but having signed a separate surety-bond two days subsequent to the advance of the money:—Held, that the subsequent surety-bond was void for want of consideration under s. 127 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). Per STUART, C.J.—The legal position of the surety considered and determined. *NANAK RAM v. office of overseer to a ferry fund committee, the surety became bound "to make good any funds entrusted to the overseer which may be misused." Held, that, under these words, the surety was liable for a loss of funds arising from the mere carelessness or indiscretion of the principal, independently of any dishonesty, as by his lending the money to contractors. SECRETARY OF THE FERRY FUND COMMITTEE v. WARD . Marsh. 89 : 1 Hay 155

7. ——— Bond for performance of duties of office—Clerk of Small Cause Court—Subordinate Judge, powers of. The defendant and J W C, clerk of the Small Cause Court at Allahabad, entered into a bond to the Judge of the Small Cause Court, as well as to his successors in office, in a certain sum as security for the true and faithful performance by J W C, of his duties as clerk of the said Court, and for his well and truly accounting for all moneys entrusted to his keeping as such clerk of the Court. Held, in a suit against the defendant as surety, that he was liable for misappropriation by J W C of moneys arising from sales of moveable property held in execution of decrees passed by the Judge of the Small Cause Court in the exercise of his powers as Subordinate Judge, and that, had the Small Cause Court Judge not been invested at the time of the execution of the bond with the powers of a Subordinate Judge, the defendant's liability in respect of such moneys would not have been thereby affected. CROSTHWAITE v. HAMILTON

8. ——— Creditor and surety—Right of surety to benefit of securities held by creditor—Surety for a part of debt due by principal debtor to creditor—Payment by surety of that part—Right of surety to benefit of securities does not arise until whole of debt paid off—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 141. In August 1889, one K was indebted to the Bank of Bengal (the defendants) in the sum of R3,15,000. The Bank pressed for security or payment, and on the 5th September 1889 K executed in favour of the Bank, two mortgages of certain immoveable properties, the value of which was estimated to be R1,35,000. The mortgages, though stamped to secure this amount only, were drawn to cover the whole liability of K to the Bank, and recited that he had become largely indebted to the Bank on certain bills, etc., and had agreed to give security in respect of such indebtedness as was thereafter expressed, and they contained covenants by K to pay to the Bank all sums of money then due, or thereafter to become due, by him in respect of such bills, etc. Besides the said two mortgages, the Bank obtained other securities for a further sum of R55,000, making the total sum secured R1,90,000, and leaving a balance of R1,25,000 unsecured. Under these circumstances, the Bank refused to renew certain bills of K's which fell due on the 9th September 1889, unless further security were given, and accordingly the plaintiff became surety for K for the sum of R1,25,000. This sum

he was subsequently obliged to pay, and he then brought this suit claiming to share in the proceeds of the mortgages held as security by the Bank. He contended that these mortgages were given as security for the whole debt (viz., R3,15,000); that of this debt he as surety had paid a part, viz., R1,25,000 to the Bank; and that he was therefore to that extent entitled to stand in the place of the Bank and to receive a share of the proceeds of the said securities proportioned to the sum which he had paid. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of the securities held by the Bank until the whole of the debt due to the Bank by K was paid. A surety, who has paid the debt which he has guaranteed, has a right to the securities held by the creditor, because as between the principal debtor and surety the principal is under an obligation to indemnify the surety. The equity between the creditor and the surety is that the creditor shall not do anything to deprive the surety of that right. But the creditor's right to hold his securities until his whole debt is paid is paramount to the surety's claim upon such securities, which only arises when the creditor's claim against such securities has been satisfied. GOVERDHANDAS GOKULDAS TEJPAL v. BANK OF BENGAL . . . I. L. R. 15 Bom. 48

9. ——— Stipulation with bank to be considered as sureties only as respected the principal debtor, not principal debtors as between themselves and bank. The appellants, in becoming sureties to the respondent Bank, covenanted that, though as respects the principal debtor they should be considered as sureties only, yet as regards the Bank they should "be considered as principal debtors," so as not to be exonerated from liability by any dealings between the Bank and the principal debtor, which would otherwise have that effect. Held, that the appellants became liable as principals to the Bank immediately on the default of the principal debtor, and were not discharged by reason of time having been given to him. The effect of the deed being plain, neither appellant could escape liability except by proof of misrepresentation or undue influence. HODGES v. DELHI AND LONDON BANK . L. R. 27 I. A. 168

10. ——— Laches of creditor—What amounts to laches—Discharge of surety. Plaintiff advanced money to K to enable him to complete a Government contract and repayment was secured by an assignment of the expected profits. The official to whom the arrangement was notified declined to recognize it, and this was known to all parties. K made default in payment and the plaintiff, who had taken no further steps in applying to the Government for payment of profits according to the arrangement between himself and K, found that K had been drawing the profits. In a suit against the surety, who claimed to be exempt from liability at least to the extent of the profits which the plaintiff might by due diligence have received:—Held, that the plaintiff had not neglected any imperative

22. ———— Joint decree—Liability of surety—Liable for full amount decreed in the absence of any equity. Where principal and surety are jointly sued and a decree is passed against both for a certain amount and against the principal for the full amount, including the amount jointly decreed, the contract of suretyship is merged in the decree and the surety, when the whole amount has not been recovered from the principal, remains liable for the balance to the extent of the amount decreed against him unless he can show some equity in his favour which entitles him to say that he is not liable for the full amount decreed against him. No such equity arises, because the amount recoverable by attachment and sale from the principal was reduced by rateable distribution among other creditors of the principal by an order under s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure; nor can the surety claim that a proportionate share of the amount realised from the principal must go to reduce his own liability. *APASAMI AYYANGAR v. B did not render account for the year 1308, and was allowed to realize rents for 1309 in breach of the terms of the contract. 4. ———— Relinquishment of portion of claim by creditor—Act prejudicial to surety. Where a creditor sued his principal debtor and two sureties upon a mortgage-bond, and in his plaint formally relinquished his claim against part of the mortgaged property, it was held that after such relinquishment the sureties were no longer bound, their position being altered for the worse by reason of such relinquishment. *NARAYAN GOVIND OK v. 5. ———— Right of surety to disclosure of material facts—Absence of fraud. There is no rule of law entitling a surety, without question asked, to a disclosure of all material facts known to the creditor which it may be material for him to know. 6. ———— Concealment of material fact from surety—Guarantee—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 133, 143—Further duties imposed on person for whom defendants were sureties. In August 1881 the defendants became sureties to the Bank of Bengal for the due discharge by one B of the duties and liabilities of the office of khajanchi of the Bank in Bombay. B was the second clerk in the Bank, and it was arranged between him and the agent that he should still continue to fill that office. He did so after his appointment as khajanchi, and he received the same salary as before in respect of it. In 1889 defalcations, for which as khajanchi he was responsible, were discovered to the extent of Rs. 42,142. The Bank obtained a decree against him for the total amount and they sued the defendants as sureties. The defendants pleaded that they were not liable, inasmuch as the Bank had appointed B to perform the duties of second clerk, in addition to those of khajanchi without their knowledge and consent and they contended that such appointment amounted to a subsequent variation of the contract, which discharged them under s. 133

of the Contract Act as to transactions subsequent to the variance. The Court was of opinion that, inasmuch as the evidence showed that B was second clerk at the time of his appointment as khajanchi and continued afterwards to fill that office by arrangement between him and the agent of the Bank the question was not whether there had been a subsequent variation of the contract, but whether, as the surety-bond was silent as to this part of the arrangement between the Bank and B, and it was made (as the defendants alleged) without their knowledge and consent they were discharged from liability on the ground that a material circumstance had been concealed from them. Held, that the defendants were not discharged from liability. The expression "keeping silence" in s. 143 of the Contract Act clearly implies intentional concealment as distinguished from mere non-disclosure. The withholding must be fraudulent, as necessarily is the case where a material circumstance is intentionally concealed. In this case there was not the slightest reason to suppose that there had been any intentional concealment by the Bank of the fact that B was to continue to fill the office of second clerk, or that, if the defendants had been informed of it, it would have in the least degree affected their readiness to make themselves liable for his faithful discharge of the duties of khajanchi. The evidence showed that the duties of the two offices were perfectly distinct, and therefore, even if B had been re-appointed to the office of second clerk after his appointment to the office of khajanchi (as it was contended for the defendants was the proper way of regarding what occurred), there would have been no material alteration in the duties of khajanchi which would have relieved the defendants from their obligation as sureties, but merely the addition of a new office which would not affect the sureties' liability, unless, indeed, the surety-bond contained an agreement that the principal should not undertake any other business. It was also contended for the defendants that they were discharged liability, inasmuch as in the year 1883 the names on certain bills discounted with the Bank were found to be forged. The Bank then made a claim upon B in respect thereof, and he repudiated his liability. The defendants contended, on the authority of Phillips v. Foxall, L. R. 7 Q. B. 666, that it was the duty of the Bank to have informed them of this occurrence at that time. Held (distinguishing Phillips v. Foxall), that it could not have been assumed that B was infallible in detecting forgeries, and the guarantee given by the defendants was not therefore founded on that assumption and therefore fair dealing could not require that the Bank should at once have informed the sureties as soon as B had proved to be fallible. *BALKRISHNA KIRTIKAR v. A kabuliati whereby a lessee agrees, without the consent of the person guaranteeing the payment of the rent agreed to be paid under a former kabuliati, that he will pay rent at a higher rate than that agreed to be paid in such former kabuliati, amounts to a variance of the terms of the contract of guarantee, and discharges the lessee's surety in respect of arrears of rent accruing subsequent to such variance. *KHATUN BIBI v. In a suit against a principal and two sureties to recover the amount advanced on a bond by which certain immoveable property was mortgaged, one of the sureties appeared and contended that he was discharged from his liability in consequence of the plaintiff's neglect to have the bond registered. Held, that the surety was discharged, as he could only be liable by virtue of the mortgage-bond, which, being invalid for want of registration, could not be used against him. The principal, however, might be sued as for money lent, if the loan could be proved by the other evidence. SHANKAR BAPU v. VISHNU NARAYAN. 4 Bom. A.C. 79

By a condition in these bills, the Bank was authorized, in default of payment within the time stipulated, to dispose of the copper by public or private sale, and to reimburse themselves the principal and interest due thereon. Shortly afterwards F & Co. failed, and assignees of their estate and effects were appointed under the Insolvent Act. On presentation to A of the first of the renewed bills, he served notice on the Bank not to part with the securities deposited with them alleging that the bills drawn and renewed by him were accommodation bills, for which he had not received any consideration, and were renewed on the faith of the securities being applicable to their discharge. The assignees of F & Co. redeemed the copper by paying to the Bank the amount of the principal and interest due on the bills drawn by F & Co., all the bills drawn by

11. — Agreement for payment of decree, or in default to execute it—Failure to execute it on default—Act IX of 1872, ss. 134, 137, 139 and 141. A decree-holder, in execution proceedings, agreed to accept payment of the decretal amount by the judgment-debtors in annual instalments. He also accepted from certain other persons a surety-bond in the following terms: "In case of default of paying the instalments, the whole decretal money, with costs and interest at 8 annas per cent., shall be executed after one month; and for the satisfaction of the decree-holder we, the executants, stand as sureties of the judgment-debtors. The judgment debtors paid five instalments and then made default. The decree-holder omitted to apply for execution, and the decree became time barred. He then sued the sureties to recover the amount of the decree. Held, that the terms of the bond requiring the creditor to execute his decree within one month were peremptory, and imported much more than the usual agreement under such circumstances; that the decree-holder might execute his decree, if he pleased, on a default; that the legal consequence of his omission to execute the decree being the discharge of the principal debtors, the sureties would, under s. 134 of the Contract Act, stand discharged likewise; that his action was much more serious than "mere forbearance" in favour of this debtors, in the sense of s. 137; that he had done an act inconsistent with the equities of the sureties, and omitted to do an act which his duty to them (under the agreement) required, whereby their eventual remedy against the principal debtors was impaired (s. 139); that he had deprived the sureties of the benefit of the security constituted by the decree; that they were therefore discharged to the extent of the value of that security (s. 141); and that the suit must consequently be dismissed. *HAZARI v. 12. — Giving time to principal—Execution of subsequent agreement unknown to surety. A and his surety B executed a bond to C for the faithful discharge of A's duties as a gomashtha. In September 1866, upon accounts being rendered, A was found indebted to C in a certain sum of money.

14. — Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 37, 39, 66—Contract Act, s. 135—Accommodation maker, discharge of—Presentment of promissory note. Suit by the endorsee against the maker of a promissory note, dated 9th August, 1886. The plaintiff was aware that the note was made by the defendant for the accommodation of the acceptor, Watson & Co., with whom the plaintiff had large dealings. On the 4th August, 1887, Watson & Co. executed in favour of the plaintiff and another creditor a mortgage of certain property to secure the amount then due by Watson & Co., including the amount due to the plaintiff on the promissory note: the mortgage contained a personal covenant by Watson & Co. to pay the sums due, together with interest on the 4th August, 1888; and the mortgagees practically took over the whole business of the mortgagor, and it was intended that they should work it for his benefit up to that date. The promissory note fell due in June 1887, but was not presented to the defendant for payment. Held, that the plaintiff, by accepting the mortgage, promised to give time to Watson & Co., and thus rendered it impossible for him to sue Watson & Co. had the defendant as surety called on him to do so, and that the defendant was accordingly discharged. *Pogose v. On 13th September 1867 the defendant drew a hundi for R2,500, payable forty-one days after date in the usual way, and it was stipulated between him and S A that the value should be paid by S A in three days. On 15th September, the plaintiff in Calcutta discounted the hundi in the ordinary course of business, paying for it R2,468, or thereabouts. It then purported to be accepted by the defendant in favour of S A. Before the hundi fell due, S A failed, and the plaintiff took the hundi to the defendant in Calcutta, and, informing him of S A's failure, asked him to pay the hundi. The defendant admitted he had drawn the hundi, denied he had accepted it, and refused to pay, saying (he alleged) that he had received no consideration for it. Before the failure to S A, who had not paid the consideration as stipulated, the defendant pressed him for payment of the consideration for the hundi, and S A wrote and delivered to the defendant the following letter, dated September, 16th, 1867, from himself to his firm in Calcutta: "Further, I sent you a chitti (hundi) for R2,500, drawn by Bhugwan Das (the defendant) upon Bhugwan Das upon (us) Calcutta; value deposited by me on September 13th, 1867, payable forty-one days after date in Company's rupees. I have taken a hundi of this description, which you will pay on its due date. The money has not been paid, for which I give this puja in writing, which you will know." After S A's failure, and after the defendant's refusal to pay on the due date, the plaintiff made the arrangement with S A, which is embodied in the following letter from S A, to the plaintiff, dated November 3rd, 1867: "Further, I discounted with you at Calcutta hundis for R5,000, which, one Pitam Das coming to Calcutta, were paid off in the following manner: a hundi for R2,500 drawn by Bhugwan Das, on Bhugwan Das, value deposited by me on the 15th day of the light side of the moon in Bhadra, payable forty-one days after date in Company's rupees; and a hundi for R2,500 by Gopi Shaw, Debi Shaw, Radha Shaw, Ram Sahayi Ray, value deposited by me on 14th day of the light side of the moon in Bhadra payable forty-one days after date in Company's rupees. I discounted hundis of this description, and out of them I paid R2,200 in cash through Syad Mahomed Hossain Khan Sahib. The balance, R2,800, is due the condition for payment of which is as follows (here follows the manner in which payment was to be made): I made an agreement of this sort, and I will pay the whole of the amount, inclusive of interest at 8 annas, and will take the two hundis from Bhai Ram Kissen Futteh Chund, with whom they are kept: Should I not pay the money according to the condition, then you have the authority." For the defendant it was contended that the effect of the letter of 16th September was to make the defendant a surety only for S A; that the plaintiff had notice of this at the time of entering into the agreement giving time to S A, which therefore operated as a release to the defendant. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the amount of the hundi from the defendant, the Court found that it was not proved that the hundi had been accepted by the defendant, but held that, whether the effect of the agreement contained in the letter of September 16th was to make the defendant a surety only or not, the defendant was liable. Per NORMAN, J.—Notice of the defendant's position in regard to the hundi was not com-

21. — Omission by creditor to sue principal debtor within period of limitation—Contract Act, ss. 131, 137—Discharge of surety. The omission of a creditor to sue his principal debtor within the period of limitation discharges the surety under s. 134 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872); even though the non-suing within such period arose from the creditor's forbearance, s. 137 of the Contract Act does not limit the effect of s. 134. Its object is to explain and prevent misconception as to the meaning of s. 135. It applies only to a forbearance during the time that the creditor can be said to be forbearing to exercise a right which is still in existence. Hajarimal v. Krishnarav. I. L. PRIVATE DEFENCE, RIGHT OF—contd.

1. ———— Commencement of, and restrictions on, right—Penal Code, ss. 97, 99.* The right of private defence, as described in s. 97 of the Penal Code, is subject to the restrictions mentioned in s. 99, that is, it should be exercised only in the defence of one's own body or that of another person against an offence affecting the human body. Under s. 102, the right commences only on a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body caused by an attempt or threat to commit an offence, and by s. 99, cl. 4, the right is restricted to not inflicting more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. QUEEN v. GOBARDHAN BHUYAN 4 B L. R. Ap. 101 : 13 W. R. Cr. 55

2. ———— Extent of right—Penal Code, s. 103 and s. 99.* The right of private defence under s. 103 of the Penal Code is restricted by s. 99 of that Code, and does not extend to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. QUEEN v. DHUNUNJAI POLY 14 W. R. Cr. 68

3. ———— Commencement and extent of the right—Penal Code, ss. 99, 105—Information of offence to be committed.* The third clause of s. 99 of the Penal Code must be read with the first clause of s. 105. The right of private defence of property commences when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences. Before such apprehension commences, the owner of the property is not called upon to apply for protection to the public authorities. The apprehension which justifies a recourse to the authorities ought to be based on some information of a definite kind as to the time and place of the danger actually threatened. The accused No. 1 received information, one evening, that the complainants intended to go on his land on the following day and uproot the juvari seed sown in it. At about 3 o'clock next morning he was informed that the complainants had entered on his land and were ploughing up the seed. Thereupon he at once proceeded to the spot, followed by the other accused, and remonstrated with the complainants. The complainants, without paying any attention to his remonstrances, commenced an attack on the accused. In the fight which ensued, both sides received serious injuries, and the leader of the complainant's party was killed. The accused were thereupon charged and convicted, under ss. 304, 114, 325, and 323 of the Penal Code, of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and of causing hurt. Held, reversing the convictions, that the complainants being the aggressors, the accused had, under the circumstances, the right of private defence, both of person and of property, and that, in the exercise of this right, they did not inflict more harm than was necessary. Held, also, that the accused were not bound to act on the information received on the previous evening and seek the protection of the public authorities, as they had no reason to apprehend a night-attack on their property. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NARSANG PATHABHAI . . . I. L. R. 14 Bom. 441

PRIVATE DEFENCE, RIGHT OF—contd.

4. ———— Pleading right—Persons inviting attack.* The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who, believing they will be attacked, court the attack. QUEEN v. NOWABDEE W. R. 1864 Cr. 11

5. ———— Onus probandi—Alternative plea.* It is for those who raise the plea of private defence to prove it. The act charged cannot be denied, and the plea of private defence raised as an alternative. If raised, a full account of the occurrence must be given in evidence. In the matter of the petition of JAMES SIRDAR 1 C. L. R. 62

6. ———— Right of private defence—Plea of accused.* If the accused pleads not guilty and does not admit the act, but the pleader for the defence advances in his argument the plea of the right of private defence, the duty of the Court is to accept the plea if it appears upon the evidence, either for the prosecution or from the defence, that what was done by the accused was in self-defence. PASPUT GOPE v. RAM BHAJAN OJHA 1 C. W. N. 545

7. ———— Onus probandi—Evidence Act, s. 105.* Where the accused had been convicted of riot under s. 148 and of grievous hurt under s. 325 of the Penal Code, the Sessions Judge on appeal held that the complainants had themselves been the aggressors, and that the accused had merely exercised the right of private defence; but, inasmuch as they had not set up the plea of private defence, he considered it was not competent to him to set aside the conviction. Held, that, though the onus was on the accused, the finding of the Judge amounted to one that they had discharged that onus, and on that finding the accused were entitled to an acquittal. In the matter of KALI CHURN MOOKERJEE 11 C. L. R. 232

8. ———— Exercise of right—Possession.* A party in possession of land is legally entitled to defend his possession against another party seeking to eject him by force. QUEEN v. TULSI SINGH 2 B. L. R. A. Cr. 16 : 10 W. R. Cr. 64

QUEEN v. MOKEE . . . 12 W. R. Cr. 15

9. ———— Dispute as to possession of land. Where A is in actual peaceable possession of land, B's attempt to recover possession of it by force is an illegal act which A has a right to resist. If B uses force in carrying out his attempt, A has a right to oppose force to force, and to inflict upon B such injury as is necessary to compel him to desist. QUEEN v. SACHEE alias SACHEE BOLER . . . 7 W. R. Cr. 112

10. ———— Criminal trespass—Penal Code, ss. 99 and 104.* Where the offence which occasions the right of private defence of property is criminal trespass, the right of defence under s. 104 of the Penal Code only extends (subject to the restrictions of s. 99) to the voluntarily causing to the wrong-doers some harm other than death. QUEEN v. GOBURDHUN PARI 14 W. R. Cr. 74

PRIVATE DEFENCE, RIGHT OF—contd.

11. ——— Culpable homicide. The legal right of private defence of the body and property is not exceeded by a person who is attacked by another with a spear, and who strikes a blow with a latee, which results in the death of the party attacking, and such right of private defence of the body extends, under s. 100 of the Penal Code, to the taking of life where grievous hurt is reasonably apprehended. QUEEN v. MOIZUDIN

11 W. R. Cr. 41

12. ——— Penal Code, ss. 148, 304—Culpable homicide. The prisoners, who in resisting a sudden attack made upon them by certain persons for the purpose of cutting their crop, and when they had no time to complain to the police, inflicted a wound on one of them with a bamboo, from the effects of which the man died, were convicted by the Sessions Judge under ss. 148 and 304 of the Penal Code. The High Court acquitted the prisoners, holding that the force used, or the injuries inflicted, were not such as to exceed their rights of private defence of property. QUEEN v. GOOROO CHURN CHANG

6 B. L. R. Ap. 9 : 14 W. R. Cr. 69

13. ——— Penal Code, s. 100, cl. 2, and s. 103, cl. 4. Under the facts of this case, a person was held to have rightly exercised the right of private defence as contemplated in cl. 2, s. 100, and cl. 4, s. 103, Penal Code, though in the exercise of such right he killed one of his aggressors. QUEEN v. RAM LALL SINGH

22 W. R. Cr. 51

14. ——— 'House-breaking—Limits of right of defence. The right of private defence of property against house-breaking does not extend to causing the death of the house-breaker when he has made his escape from the premises empty-handed, and is at some distance from the place. No more harm should be done than is necessary to effect his capture. QUEEN v. BOLAKI JOLAHAD

1 B. L. R. S. N. 8 : 10 W. R. Cr. 9

15. ——— Attacking man found in house at night. The accused was attacked by a man whom he found by a hole cut in his house for the purpose of committing a burglary, and struck the man a blow which caused his death. Held, that the accused simply exercised his right of private defence, and had committed no crime. QUEEN v. PELKOO NUSHYO

Code, 1861, s. 135. An officer, subordinate to an officer in charge of a police station, who was deputed by the latter to make an inquiry under s. 135 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, attempted without a search warrant to enter a house in search of property alleged to have been stolen, and was obstructed and resisted. Held (applying s. 99 of the Penal Code), that, even though the police officer was not strictly justified in searching the house without a warrant, the person obstructing and resisting could not set up the illegality of the officer's proceeding as a justification of his obstruction, and it was not shown that that officer was acting otherwise than in good faith and without malice. *REG. v. Held, that, having regard to s. 99 of the Penal Code, even though the Sub-Inspector was not strictly justified in searching a house without a warrant, the persons obstructing and resisting could not set up the illegality of the officer's proceeding as a justification of their obstruction, as it was not shown that that officer was acting otherwise than in good faith and without malice. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 19. ——— Penal Code, ss. 99 and 186—Voluntarily obstructing a public servant in discharge of his duties—Mamlatdar's decree—Execution by a surveyor under Collector's orders—Public function. In a suit filed in a Mamlatdar's Court under Bombay Act III of 1876, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the accused for possession of a certain piece of land. When the Mamlatdar proceeded to execute the decree, he found that there was no land corresponding to the boundaries set forth in the plaint, and that the parties were joint owners and in joint occupation of the land in dispute. Finding himself unable to execute the decree, the Mamlatdar referred the matter to the Collector for advice. The Collector, on looking into the papers of the case, ordered a surveyor to execute the decree by dividing the land in dispute and putting the decree-holder in possession of his share. The surveyor, in attempting to execute the decree, was obstructed by the accused, who was thereupon tried and convicted of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, under s. 186 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). Held, that the Collector's order was entirely ultra vires as to leave no room for the operation of either the first or the second clause of s. 99 of the Penal Code, as to right of private defence. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. The debtor forcibly resisted the officer, and was tried and convicted, under s. 353 of the Penal Code, of assaulting a public servant in the execution of his duty as such. Held, with reference to s. 99 of the Penal Code, that the act of the accused did not cease to be an offence on the ground that it was done in the exercise of the right of private defence. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. —Persons acquitted of culpable homicide, but convicted of rioting. In an affray respecting land one of the aggressive party was killed. The prisoners, who were exercising the right of private defence of property, were acquitted by the jury of culpable homicide, but convicted of rioting. Held, that, not being legally guilty of any offence coupled with rioting, and not being rioters or members of an unlawful assembly, they could claim the benefit of s. 104, Penal Code: they were therefore released. *QUEEN v. 24. ————— Rioting—Unlawful assembly—Right of private defence of property—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 97, 103, 104, 105, and 107. A party of persons consisting of some five peadas and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M for the purpose of either repairing or erecting a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on the lands of their master T. The river at the time was almost dry, and the party did not go armed ready to fight or use force, and they did not during the subsequent occurrence use force. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M. a body of men, consisting about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathis and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathis. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly"; that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work, and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so. Held, that the prisoners had been rightly convicted. Held, further, that, as no right of private defence of property is conferred by the Penal Code, except as against the perpetrators of offences under the Penal Code, and that, as upon the facts of the case as found no offence had been committed by T's people, their acts amounting merely to a civil trespass, and as there was no pressing or immediate necessity of a kind, showing that there was no time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, no question as to the right of private defence arose in the case. *GANOURI LAL DAS v. Party B, claiming the field and the crop as theirs, entered upon the land and began to cut the crop. The villagers belonging to C walked in a religious procession, through a part of the village of K, carrying with them a vessel containing water which purported to be consecrated. The villagers of K, objecting, obstructed the procession, whereupon the members of it resisted the obstruction, and used some violence, causing grievous hurt to one of the obstructors and hurt to others of them. The members of the procession were charged with, and convicted of, being members of an unlawful assembly, possessing deadly weapons, and causing grievous hurt; and their convictions were upheld on appeal. On revision:—Held, that the convictions were wrong. The accused were justified, in the circumstances, in exercising their right of private defence; and the harm inflicted was not more than appeared to have been necessary for the purpose of self-defence. *REGULA BHEEMAPPA v. That as the warrant issued was wholly illegal and must be treated as nullity, the accused were not deprived of the right of private defence under s. 99, Indian Penal Code. 31. ——— Attack by a large body of armed men prepared to fight—Rioting—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 96 to 106, 147, 325. The complainant's party, consisting of twelve or thirteen persons, went with kodalis to a bund erected on the land of the master of the accused in order to cut it, as it obstructed the flow of water from their lands and destroyed their crops. The accused hearing of this at once assembled to the number of 50 or 60, armed themselves with lathis and proceeded to the bund. At this time the complainant's party had either finished the cutting or ceased to do so, when they saw the accused approaching. The latter attacked the complainant's party and drove them to their village. One or more of the assailants also beat a man, who was present there, but was not connected with the cutting of the bund, both in the first attack and when they returned from the chase, and fractured his skull, in consequence of which he died shortly after. Held, that the accused were members of an unlawful assembly from the beginning, as they went armed with lathis and in large numbers to enforce their right at all hazards, that, if not so at the beginning, they became an unlawful assembly and had no right of private defence, when the opposite party had ceased cutting the bund, and that, even if they had, they exceeded their right by attacking their opponents and chasing them and by beating the deceased. *Shunker Singh v. There is no right of private defence where two parties arm themselves for a fight to enforce their right or supposed right, and deliberately engage in large numbers in a fight. 33. ——— Common object as found by Original and Appellate Courts—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 96—106. No right of private defence arises where a large body of men go armed and prepared for a fight, and attack the opposite party with intent to enforce their right or supposed right to certain land. The petitioners numbering from forty to sixty, armed with lathis, spears and heavy billets of wood, proceeded to the disputed land, attacked the complainant and his father, and destroyed the crops growing thereon. Both parties claimed the land as having fallen to their shares on partition. The Magistrate found that the complainant was in possession and had grown the crops. Held, that the right of private defence did not arise, as there was no invasion of the petitioner's rights on the day of occurrence, and, in any case, that they had ample time to have recourse to the authorities for the protection of their rights. Where the accused were charged with rioting with intent to dispossess the complainant, but the Appellate Court thought the question of possession not clear and found them guilty of rioting with the intention of enforcing their right or supposed right: Held, that both common objects raised the same questions, and that the accused were in no way prejudiced. *MANIRUDDIN v. French citizens in British India—Onus—Domicile, proof of—Post-nuptial marriage settlement—Immoveable property, law governing—Lex rei sitæ—Matrimonial domicile—Code Napoleon, Arts. 1401—1496. One Alexandre Charriol married a French woman in British India sans contract. Subsequently he executed a marriage settlement dealing with certain immoveable property in Calcutta settling the same on certain trusts. The property was sold later on and the sale-proceeds were invested in certain funds. In this suit by the present trustees for directions for the disposition of the trust funds, the question was whether the deed was invalid and inoperative and therefore whether French, and not English law, should govern the disposal. Held, that the onus was first on the person attacking the settlement to show conclusively that the settlor was a French citizen with a French domicile. Held, also, on the facts of this case, that the settlor was not a French citizen with a French domicile. Held, further, that even if the settlor were of French domicile, his having married a French woman sans contract did not imply such a special contract as would take away the operation of the ordinary rule that lex rei sitæ would govern immoveable property. *D'Nicols v. Evidence Act (I of 1872), a communication by a party to his attorney must be of a confidential or private nature. Where defendants at an interview, at which the plaintiff was present, admitted their partnership to their attorney, who was then also acting as attorney for the plaintiff:—Held, that the attorney was not precluded by s. 126 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) from giving evidence of this admission to him: 1st, because the defendants' statements, having been made in presence and hearing of the plaintiff, could not be regarded as confidential or private: 2nd, because those statements did not appear to have been made to the attorney exclusively in his character of attorney for the defendants, but to have been addressed to him also as attorney for the plaintiff. MEMON HAJEE HAROON MAHOMED v. 2. ———— Privilege, extent of—How far solicitor bound to disclose communication made in course of employment—Attorney and client—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 126. The law relating to professional communications between a solicitor and a client is the same in India, as in England. It is not every communication made by a client to an attorney that is privileged from disclosure. The privilege extends only to communications made to him confidentially, and with a view to obtaining professional advice. Where a solicitor claims privilege under s. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), he is bound to disclose the name of his client, on whose behalf he claims the privilege. The mere fact that the client's name had been communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as solicitor by another client, affords no excuse, unless it was communicated to him confidentially, on the express understanding that it was not to be disclosed. But a solicitor is not at liberty, without his client's express consent, to disclose the nature of his professional employment. S. 126 of the Indian Evidence Act protects from publicity not merely the details of the business, but also its general purport, unless it be known aliunde that such business falls within proviso I or II to the section. At an interview between a solicitor and a client, the solicitor took down a certain statement made by a person named A B, who was in his client's company, and whose name was communicated to him in the course and for the purpose of his professional employment. A B was afterwards tried for defamation, and the solicitor was examined by the prosecution with reference to the statement made to him by the accused at the above interview. The solicitor was asked whether the person who had made the statement had given his name as A B. The solicitor declined to answer the question on the ground of privilege. Held, that the solicitor was bound to answer the question, unless A B's name was communicated to him by his client in confidence with a view to its not being disclosed. FRAMJI BHICAJI v. In order that privilege may be claimed, it must be shown on the face of the affidavit that the documents were prepared or written merely for the use of the solicitor. BIPRO DOSS DEY v. 10. ——— Letters between solicitors for various plaintiffs—Attorney and client—Inspection—Production—Waiver of privilege. The plaintiffs resided in England, and sued the defendant in Bombay for specific performance of an agreement to purchase certain premises. This agreement had been made on behalf of the plaintiffs by S, their agent in Bombay. The defendant pleaded that by the terms of the agreement it was provided that the deed of assignment should contain a covenant by the three plaintiffs to indemnify the defendant against any claims upon the premises that might be made at any time by or on behalf of the representatives of one N. The defendant's solicitor prepared a draft assignment which contained this covenant, and sent it to the plaintiff's solicitors (Messrs. P and W) for approval. On the 19th March 1880, W called upon B, the defendant's solicitor, and informed him that M, the third plaintiff, refused to sign any deed which contained the above covenant. At this interview W read to B portions of a letter written with reference to the proposed deed by McG & Co. (solicitors for the first two plaintiffs) to V, the solicitor of the third plaintiff, and of another letter written by V to his client, the third plaintiff. The defendant called upon the plaintiff to produce these letters for inspection. Held, that the letters were privileged, and that the fact that portions of them had been read to the defendant's solicitor was no waiver of the privilege as regarded the parts which were not read. *KAY v. The petition imputed criminal acts to the zamindar, who now sued the petitioners for damages on the ground that the petition contained a false and malicious libel. It was found that in fact the communication was made bonâ fide, and that there was some ground for some of the imputations. Held that the petition was a privileged communication, and the alleged libel was not actionable. Indian Evidence Act, makes the public officer, to whom a communication is made in official confidence, the judge of whether such communication should or should not be divulged in the public interest, and he is entitled to decide whether the public interests would suffer by its production, and, if he considers they would so suffer, to refuse to produce it. *Beatson v. Where a public officer, to whom a defamatory communication had been made in official confidence, claimed privilege on the ground that the publication of the communication might cause a scandal in the office: Held, that the case did not come in within s. 124 of the Evidence Act, inasmuch as the officer in this case did not consider that public interest would suffer, but claimed privilege on a different ground, viz., to prevent a scandal in the office. *BIDHU BHUSAN BOSE v. 1. ———— Decree of affirmance or refusal—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Valuation. In a Land Acquisition case the applicant claimed a sum of R77,000 odd as the value of the land taken; the Collector assessed the value at R28,287; the Judge on reference to him upheld the Collector's award. The applicant then preferred an appeal to the High Court valuing the appeal at R49,000 odd, being the difference between the Collector's award and the amount claimed. The High Court partially decreed the appeal by giving the petitioner an additional sum of about R7,000. The appellant then applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Held, that the decree of the High Court was properly a decree of affirmance of the first Court's decree as regards the subject-matter of the proposed appeal and as there was no question of law the application ought to be refused. *SREE NATH ROY BAHADUR v. On an application having been made for leave to appeal to the Privy Council:—Held, that the certificate prayed for should be given, for (i) even if the order to be appealed from was interlocutory, the High Court had discretion to grant the certificate under cl. 40 of the Amended Letters Patent; (ii) that the value of the subject-matter was R10,000; and (iii) the question raised was one of jurisdiction. *MUNICIPAL OFFICER, ADEN, v. The relation of the

Kathiawar States to the British Crown was that the Chiefs paid a forced tribute, but were otherwise independent. Political control was largely exercised over them, but the intervention was only with the object of maintaining peace, good order, and security: there was no assertion of territorial sovereignty; and no legislative power over the province was claimed. The nature and extent of the control exercised by the British Indian authorities over the administration of justice in Kathiawar were that all arrangements were carried out, not by legislative action, but by orders or resolutions of the Executive Government. In cases within the jurisdiction of the Chiefs, there was no judicial appeal to the British authorities. The Agency Courts dealt with the classes of cases withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Chiefs, the functions of the Political Agent being not so much judicial as "diplomatic and controlling." Appeals from the Agency Courts lay, not to the High Court, but to the Governor of Bombay in Council, and thence to the Secretary of State for India, the whole system showing that the intention of Government was, and always had been, that the jurisdiction exercised in connexion with Kathiawar should be political and not judicial in its character. Two suits were instituted in, and determined by the Agency Courts in Kathiawar and by the Governor of Bombay in Council; one, to enforce a mortgage, was classed as a "Civil" case, and the other, to redeem a mortgage, was merely on account of the rank of the parties classed as "political." Held, that there was, for the purposes of these appeals, no substantial distinction between them, and that the relation of the Kathiawar States to the British Crown and the nature and extent of the control over them being as above, no appeal lay from the orders made in such suits to the King in Council. Seem: If a Court administering justice on the King's behalf makes an order, judicial in its nature, by which some one is unjustly and injuriously affected, the person aggrieved is not precluded from applying to the King in Council to redress his wrong, merely by the fact that he is not the King's subject. *HEMCHAND DEVCHAND v. An Order in Council discharged the decrees of the High Court and District Court and referred it to the latter to frame rules for carrying out a scheme of management directed by the said Order in Council. Held, that the Order in Council disposed of the same finally, and it was not intended to make a reference to the District Court under s. 17 of the Privy Council Act, 3 and 4 Will. IV, Cap. 41. If such a reference was contemplated, the referee would have to report and the case would have been adjourned pending the receipts of such report. The judgment and order clearly did not contemplate such a report, but disposed of the case finally

An order of the High Court refusing to admit an appeal after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the Limitation Act is not a "decree passed on appeal" by a High Court under s. 595 of the Civil Procedure Code and there is therefore no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal therefrom to the Privy Council under clause (a) or (b) of that section. *Sunder Koer v. ## 2. RECORD, PREPARATION OF.

Decision limited to one of several issues of law—Omission of immaterial matter in preparation of printed book. In a suit in which the original Court had framed and decided several issues, the High Court on appeal confined their decision to the questions which in their opinion governed the case, leaving other issues undecided as not affecting the result after the decision to which they had come. Afterwards the suit was admitted to appeal in conformity with s. 603, Code of Civil Procedure. In the preparation of the printed copy of the record the question arose whether the copy should be made of the whole record, or of only so much of it as was material to the correctness of the High Court's decision.

4. ENLARGING TIME FOR APPEAL.

Jurisdiction of Judicial Committee as to application to enlarge time for appeal. The Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to entertain an application for extension of time to appeal until the petition of appeal is lodged. Where it appeared that an inquiry was pending before the Master in the Court below, arising out of the decree which was the subject of the appeal, the result of which might render the prosecution of the appeal unnecessary, the Judicial Committee enlarged the time prescribed by Rule 5 of the Order in Council of 13th June 1853 for prosecution thereof, until further order. GUNGADHUR SEAL v. RADDAMONEY DOSSEE 6 Moo. I. A. 209

5. SPECIAL LEAVE TO APPEAL.

1. Form of petition—Amendment of a petition too general and vague. It is incumbent upon a party applying for special leave to appeal to set out in the petition a full statement of the facts and legal grounds, to show that there is a substantial case on the merits, and a point of law involved, proper to be determined by the Appellate Court. A petition for special leave to appeal contained a general statement of the proceedings in India, and an averment that they were irregular and contrary to law. Such petition ordered to be dismissed or to stand over for amendment as being too general and vague. On the amended petition, stating in detail the facts, and specially showing legal grounds of objection to the decrees and order of the Court below refusing leave to appeal, special leave to appeal was granted. GOREE MONEE DOSSEE v. JUGGUT INDRO NARAIN CHOWDHRY

11 Moo. I. A. 1

2. ——— Application for special leave—Omission of material facts—Costs. A petition for special leave to appeal being ex parte, it is a universal and most important rule of the Court that every fact which is material to the determination of the question raised upon the petition should be truly and fairly stated, and where there is an omission of material facts, whether it arises from improper intention on the part of the petitioner, or whether it arises from accident or negligence, still the effect is the same, if the Court has been induced to make an order which, if the facts had been fully before it, it would not, or might not, have been induced to make. Where the Court was of opinion that there had been no intentional misrepresentation, and that there had been delay on the other side, it discharged an order giving special leave to appeal where an important fact had been kept from the Court, without costs, remarking that it would have thought it right, whether the mistake was intentional or not, to have given costs, had it not been for the delay. *MOHUN LALL SOOKUL v. 3. ——— Incorrect statement of facts—Incorrect statement as to valuation. In this case the Privy Council originally gave leave to appeal, provided satisfactory evidence were supplied by the appellants to the Registrar of the Sudder Court that the real or market value of the land in dispute exceeded R10,000. This order was subsequently discharged as obtained upon an incorrect statement of the facts, it appearing afterwards that the appellants had satisfied the Registrar that the real or market value of the land exceeded R10,000. The appeal was restored, with a general suggestion that the terms of the Bengal Stamp Regulation (X of 1829) upon the subject of value should be carefully attended to. *MOHUN LALL SOOKUL v. 7. ——— Special leave where no application made in India—Case under appealable value. The Judicial Committee will not entertain an application for special leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council from a decree of the High Court where the subject-matter in suit is under the appealable value prescribed by ss. 39 and 40 of the Bombay Charter of 1682, unless the petitioner has applied to the High Court for such leave and has been refused. *GUNGOWA KOME MALUPA v. 8. ——— Special leave where application in India not made within time—Order giving interest on amount of decree. Leave to appeal was granted on payment of costs from an order of the Sudder Court at Bombay decreeing interest upon the amount awarded by the judgment of the Court, the appellant having failed to apply to the Court in India within six months as required by the Order in Council of 10th April 1838. *KIRKLAND v. 9. ——— Alteration of practice by High Court—Appeal from original decree and order refusing review. Pending proceedings before the High Court on an application for a review of judgment, that Court altered the then prevailing practice of permitting an appeal within six months from the date of the judgment allowing or refusing a review. In such circumstances, the six months prescribed by the Order in Council of the 16th April 1838 from the date of the decree having expired, special leave to appeal from the original decree and the order refusing a review was allowed. *NOGENDRO CHUNDER GHOSE v. 11. ———— Leave granted on terms—Provision for payment of compensation agreed on. Where the Court grants leave to appeal under the general jurisdiction of the Queen in Council, it will impose such terms upon the party applying as the special circumstances of the case require. Appeal admitted from an order confirming the report of the commissioners in a partition suit, although the appealable value was under R10,000, the amount prescribed by the Order in Council of the 10th April 1838. The petitioner (the plaintiff) had offered to compensate the defendant if the report of the commissioners was varied. The Judicial Committee, in granting leave to appeal, put the petitioner upon terms of lodging in the Council office, within four months, a certificate of recognizance to the Queen in the sum of £1,500 for such compensation and costs as might be awarded. In re SIBNARAIN GHOSE

12. ———— Value of the subject-matter disputed. The value of the subject-matter in dispute, though laid in the plaint at a sum exceeding the minimum amount, R10,000, was reduced on calculation by the Zillah Judge to an amount under that sum, and the finding on the merits was for the plaintiff for such reduced sum. In a cross-appeal the Sudder Court dismissed the entire claim, and on the ground that the matter in dispute was under the appealable value, refused leave to appeal to England. On special petition, leave to appeal was granted, the appellant claiming to open the question of the value of the subject-matter in question calculated by the Zillah Judge. *PRANNATH ROY CHOWDHRY v. From the latter decree an appeal to Her Majesty in Council was then declared by the High Court to be admitted under s. 603, Civil Procedure Code. But the defendant's application to have his appeal from the decree on the cross-appeal similarly admitted was refused. The Judicial Committee, not being prepared to say, from the materials before it, that the High Court's conclusion on a pure question of fact was wrong, refused to grant special leave to appeal. 24. ———— Leave to appeal on terms—Counter-petition to revoke leave. Leave to appeal on an ex parte application was, under the special circumstances, granted on terms of the appellant prosecuting the appeal and giving security for £500. No step was, however, taken by the appellant to perfect the security or prosecute the appeal. The respondents, on being served with the order admitting the appeal, filed a counter-petition to revoke the leave granted to appeal. The Judicial Committee under the circumstances, there having been great delay, made an order putting the appellant upon terms of lodging his petition of appeal within six weeks, or the appeal to stand dismissed, and enlarged the amount of the recognizance to £1,000 to cover the expenses occasioned by proceedings which, owing to appellant's delay in appealing, had taken place in the Master's office, reserving the costs of the application to revoke the leave to appeal until the hearing. *McKELLAR v. An objection that an appeal has come before the Judicial Committee without proper authority ought to be taken at the earliest moment, but may be entertained at any stage of the appeal, and is not unfrequently heard when the appeal is called on and before the arguments on the merits have commenced. An appeal being called on, and before the case was gone into on the merits, the objection was taken by the respondent and appeared to be well founded. The appellant thereupon applied to the Judicial Committee to grant him special leave to appeal nunc pro tunc. Held, that it was competent to the Judicial Committee to grant such special leave, but leave was refused under the particular circumstances of the case. *GAJADHAR PERSAD v. In preferring an appeal to the Privy Council, in a case which is under the appealable value, a person who asks for special leave to appeal should first apply to the High Court for a certificate, under the second part of s. 600, that the case "is otherwise a fit one for appeal." Special leave to appeal will be given only in cases which involve a substantial question of law. The word 'and,' in the first part of s. 596, means 'and,' and not 'or.' *MOTI CHAND v. The Judicial Committee granted special leave to appeal in a case in which the petitioner had sued for Rs30,000, but his suit had been dismissed without any assessment of the amount of damages recoverable and the High Court had, under s. 596 of the Civil Procedure Code, refused leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the petitioner had not shown that the case was necessarily of the proper appealable value. *IKRAMUL HUQ v. Effect. The Native Appellate Court and the Native Land Court of New Zealand have been given exclusive jurisdiction over the civil rights of natives in land and in matters of succession, probate and administration, the object being to provide for determination of disputes among the natives according to their own customs. The Statute, which constituted the Native Appellate Court, declares that the decisions of the Court shall be "final and conclusive." Held, that this does not exclude a petition to His Majesty for leave to appeal. The Native Appellate Court was given jurisdiction over matters which but for its creation would have been subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary law Courts, and the exclusion of the right to appeal would therefore be a forfeiture of existing rights on the part of Sovereign and subject. *Theberge v. ## 6. LEAVE TO DEFEND APPEAL.

1. ———— Appeal by one of two defendants severed in defence—Alternative liability. Two sets of defendants severed in their defence (their interest involving an alternative as to which was responsible to the plaintiff), and the Court below fixed one set of the defendants with liability. ## 7. CROSS-APPEAL.

1. ———— Admission of cross-appeal after time—Admission on conditions. A cross-appeal from a decree of the Sudder Court in India, although not interposed within the proper time, admitted upon conditions (i) of the principal appeal being prosecuted, and (ii) that the principal and cross-appeals be consolidated and heard on one printed case. OMANATH CHOWDHRY v. NUJEEB CHOWDHRY . . . 8 Moo. I. A. 498

2. ———— Mistake of respondents as to practice. Cross-appeal allowed from part of a decree of the Sudder Court appealed from to England, although the respondents had not applied in India for leave to appeal within the proper time; the respondents being mistaken in the practice of the Judicial Committee upon a cross-appeal. Such cross-appeal directed to be prosecuted and heard upon one printed case if the principal appeal was proceeded with; but in the event of the principal appeal being dismissed for want of prosecution, liberty was reserved to the respondents to prosecute the cross-appeal as a separate appeal. *NANA NARAIN RAO v. 3. ———— Leave given at hearing to bring cross-appeal in order to open out whole decree—Appeal from part of decree. In an appeal from part of a decree the whole decree is not open to the respondents. ## 8. VALUATION OF APPEAL.

1. ———— Mode of valuation—Appeal to Privy Council—Appealable value—Stamp on plaint—Beng. Reg. X of 1829, s. 17. In estimating the appealable value for an appeal to the Privy Council by order of 10th April 1838, viz., R10,000, regard should be had to the whole matter involved in the suit, and not to the value of a fractional part of the property sought to be recovered. A suit was brought to recover a zamindari in the possession of different persons under deeds of sale in execution of a decree. The value of the property was, by Bengal Regulation X of 1829, stated in the plaint to be R14,325. The Sudder Court upheld the sales so far as related to the claim of some of the defendants. The other defendants applied for leave to appeal to England, which the Sudder Court refused, on the ground that, as the value of their portion was only RS,215, it was not within the appealable value; but this construction was overruled by the Judicial Committee, and leave was granted to appeal. Quære: Whether the stamp on the plaint required by Regulation X of 1829, s. 17, being for fiscal purposes only, is conclusive of the value of the property sued for. *AMEENA KHATOON v. Afterwards, in their printed case and at the hearing they withdrew part of their appeal, reducing, by so doing, the amount in dispute to one below the limit prescribed for appeals, where there is no special leave obtained. Held, that this did not render the appeal incompetent. *KALKA SINGH v. 2. ——— Application to stay proceedings without appealing from order refusing to stay them—Appeal from order of remand—Delay in applying. Application to stay proceedings in a cause in which an appeal from an order in the nature of an interlocutory order is pending before Her Majesty in Council ought satisfactorily to show that a serious injury will be the result to the party applying unless the delay asked for be granted, and that the party applying has come promptly to make the application. Where therefore an appellant from an order of the High Court of Judicature, which remitted back a cause appealed to that Court from the Zillah Court for the trial of issues framed in accordance with the provisions of Act XIII of 1859, s. 139, having failed in obtaining an order from the High Court to stay proceedings in the Zillah Court pending the appeal, but not having appealed from that decision, presented a petition to Her Majesty in Council praying that all proceedings in the remanded suit might be stayed till the pending appeal had been heard, the Judicial Committee, without determining the question of their right to interfere in such circumstances, held that the petitioner had not shown any such injury, or used such expedition as entitled him to ask for a stay of proceedings. Quare.—Whether, where an order has been made by the superior Court below refusing to stay proceedings, and such order is not especially appealed from, the Judicial Committee have any authority to interfere, though an appeal is pending before them from a previous order of the superior Court made in the same suit, remitting the cause back to the inferior Court before which it is pending. *SIDHEE NUZUR ALLY KHAN v. The High Court rejected his application as plaintiff (appellant) for an order staying execution and continuing the possession of a manager of the estate in litigation pending the result of the appeal. The rejection was grounded on the absence of authority for this purpose, the High Court being authorized in their judgment only to make such an order in regard to appeals admitted by themselves. On the petition that the High Court's decision might be reversed or such order made as would protect the property to abide the ultimate disposal of the suit, their Lordships were of opinion that direct interference to continue the management or to appoint a Receiver was impracticable. But that, on the other hand, interference had, on occasions, been effected where, the appellant being in possession, an order for stay of proceedings had maintained the existing state of things. Therefore, an order staying proceedings should now be recommended by them, the petitioner being answerable in damages, and any aggrieved respondent having leave to move for the discharge of the order. *MOHESCHANDRA DHAL v. 5. ——— Appeal to Privy Council—Stay of proceedings pending appeal—Application to be made to the Court in India in the first instance—Conditional order for stay—Costs. Application for stay of proceedings pending an appeal to the Judicial Committee ought always to be made, in the first instance, at any rate, to the Court in India, which has ample power to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the particular case, and has knowledge of details, which the Judicial Committee cannot possess on an interlocutory application. Application was granted in the special circumstances of this case, on the appellant giving an undertaking for expediting the hearing of the appeal, and leave was given to the respondent to apply to the Court in India for the appointment of a Receiver or for payment by the appellant of a reasonable amount in Court or any other relief as he may be advised. made by Her Majesty in Council—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 608—Intimation to Court below. A party to a suit in an Appellate Court, who had obtained leave to appeal from its decree to Her Majesty in Council, petitioned for the order of the latter staying execution of interlocutory orders made in execution of such decree, and directing payment by the petitioner to the opposite party of large sums without security taken for their repayment in the event of the decree being reversed. This accompanied a petition for special leave to appeal against those orders. The latter was granted, but it not being competent to the Judicial Committee to make any order as to the stay of execution, an intimation was made by it to the Court below that it appeared to be the reasonable course that the opposite party should not, pending the appeal, be put into possession of the large sums in dispute. 1. ———— Delay in taking proceedings after admission of appeal. An appeal was allowed in October 1854 by the Supreme Court at Calcutta to England. After the allowance of the appeal, no further steps were taken by the appellant. 15. RESTORATION OF APPEAL.

1. ———— Appeal dismissed through "unavoidable accident"—Acts XV<sub>1</sub> of 1845, XXIX of 1841, and XV of 1853, s. 6—Costs. Act XVI of 1845, amending Act XXIX of 1841, enacts that it is competent to the Sudder Court in the case of the dismissal of an appeal for want of prosecution, upon the application of the appellant within three months after the appeal has been dismissed, to re-admit the appeal, if the appellant satisfies the Court that the dismissal was "occasioned by the default of his vakil or by unavoidable accident." An appeal was made to the Sudder Court at Calcutta, but in consequence of the absence from illness of the appellant's mukhtar the written reasons of appeal were not lodged within six weeks, the time prescribed by Act XV of 1853, s. 6, and the appeal was dismissed. Upon application for re-admission of the appeal, the evidence showed that there had been no wilful delay, and that the appellant was in ignorance of the fact of the reasons of appeal not having been filed. Held, reversing the decree of the Sudder Court, that such circumstances constituted a case of "unavoidable accident" within the meaning of Act XVI of 1845, and the appeal was ordered to be re-admitted on the file of pending causes. In reversing the decree of the Sudder Court, the order of that Court that the costs of the application to re-admit the appeal should be paid by the appellants, was confirmed; but as the appellants were successful in obtaining a reversal of the decree of the Court below, the costs of the appeal in England against such decree were ordered to be paid by the respondents. *ANUNDMOYEE DOSSEE v. 2. ———— Appeal dismissed by reason of guardian absconding and abandoning case—Power to rectify mistakes in orders. By the Common Law the Judicial Committee possesses the same power as the Courts of Record and Statute have, of rectifying mistakes which have crept in by misprision or otherwise in embodying its judgments. Where therefore an order had been made ex parte upon the appearance of the respondents alone for the dismissal of an appeal, and affirmance of the judgment of the Court below which purported to be upon the hearing of the cause, the Judicial Committee held that such order must be taken simply as a dismissal; and it appearing that the appellants were infants under the protection of the Court of Wards in India, and that the agent appointed by the Court to act as their guardian ad litem in the matter of the appeal had absconded

The decision in the prior suit was on appeal reversed by the Judicial Committee. In such circumstances, on the appeal from the later decision coming on for hearing ex parte, their Lordships, with the consent of the appellant, remitted the case to the High Court, with a declaration that the deed was valid; and with directions that, if the respondent did not appear within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the High Court, to dismiss the appeal from the Zillah Court and in the event of the respondent appearing, then to hear the case on the merits. *KALEEPERSHAD TEWAREE v. 4. ——— Form of decree of High Court—General decree affirming Court below without details where lower Court merely reverses first Court. A suit for possession and redemption in which a third party intervened on the claim that the plaintiff had conveyed to him half of the property in dispute, was dismissed. On appeal by the plaintiff in which the intervenor did not appear, the lower Appellate Court merely reversed the decree of the first Court, and the High Court affirmed the decree of the lower Appellate Court. The Privy Council, while affirming the decree of the High Court, observed that the question as to the form of the decree ought to have been raised before the High Court, if it was thought that the decree was not sufficient to found execution upon, so that the details of the decree might have been stated; and they remanded the case to the High Court to amend their decree in conformity with their judgment by declaring affirmatively what the plaintiff was entitled to recover. *LALA SHAM SOONDUR LAL v. Revivor of appeal which had abated—Alteration of form of claim on appeal—Succession or inheritance. Leave to revive an appeal, in a case governed by the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), which abated on the appellant's death before the hearing, was obtained by the younger daughter of the deceased talukdar, one of the defendants, she being next among those who would have a claim to inherit the talukh in succession should the appeal be decreed. Held, that the appellant by revivor must be restricted to the suit for the talukh, and could not advance on this appeal any claim of her own which she might have preferred in a suit to inherit property which had belonged to the deceased other than the talukdari estate. *UMRAO BEGUM v. ## 19. QUESTIONS OF FACT.

1. ——— Unanimous judgment on facts—Onus of proof. The rule of the Appellate Court is that it will not, on a question of fact, reverse an unanimous judgment of the Courts in India unless the very clearest proof is shown that such decision is erroneous. TAREENY CHURN BONNERJEE v. MAITLAND . . . 11 Moo. I. A. 317

2. ——— Credibility of witnesses—Effect of evidence. It is not the habit of the Privy Council, unless in very extraordinary cases, to advise the reversal of a decision of the Courts of India merely on the effect of evidence, or the credit due to witnesses. *NARAGUNTY LUCHMEDAVAMAH v. 4. ——— Consideration of vivâ voce evidence. Considering the advantages which the Judges in India generally possess of forming a correct opinion of the probability of a transaction and in some cases of the credit due to the witnesses, the fact that the Courts below have decided against the validity of an instrument affords a strong presumption of the correctness of their decisions, but does not and ought not to relieve the Privy Council, as the Court of last resort, from the duty of examining the whole evidence, and forming for itself an opinion upon the whole case. With reference to the lamentable disregard of truth prevailing amongst the natives of India, the Privy Council held that it would be very dangerous for the Court altogether to discredit witnesses deposing vivâ voce by reason of the necessity imposed on the Court to sift the evidence of such witnesses with great minuteness and care. MO-DHOOSOODUN SANDIAL v. SOROOP CHUNDER SIRCAR CHOWDHRY

6. ——— Erroneous conclusions from evidence. Semble: The Privy Council will not disturb a judgment of a Court in India upon a question of the credibility of witnesses, unless it is manifestly clear from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case that the Court below was wrong in the conclusion drawn from such evidence. *MUSADEE MAHOMED CAZUM SHERAZEE v. 7. ——— Disputed facts—Presumption of correctness in cases of disputed fact. It is the practice of the Judicial Committee in a case of disputed fact, when the Courts in India appear to have diligently investigated the evidence, and no palpable mistake is apparent in the appreciation by the Court below of such evidence, to affirm the decree appealed from with costs. CHUNDER MONEE DEBIA CHOWDHOORAYAN v. MUN MOHINEE DEBIA
8 Moo. I. A. 477

8. ——— Judgment on facts—Appeals from Non-Regulation Provinces. In cases from Non-Regulation Provinces, wherein the procedure is somewhat loose, and where the merits depend much on local custom and local inquiry, it is even more necessary than it is on appeals from the Civil Courts in the Regulation Provinces to act on the principle of not disturbing the judgment under appeal, unless it is substantially wrong. HYDER HOSSEIN v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN
14 Moo. I. A. 401: 17 W. R. 185

9. ——— Improper admission of evidence—Sufficiency of evidence. Where evidence, such as hearsay, is improperly admitted, the question for the Judicial Committee is whether, rejecting that evidence, enough remains to support the finding. Disapproval was expressed by their Lordships of the reception by the lower Court of evidence which ought not to have been admitted. MOHUN SING v. GHURIBA

10. ——— Erroneous conclusion from evidence—Hearsay evidence. Where the High Court founded their judgment upon evidence which did not justify the conclusion, the Judicial Committee reviewed the whole evidence, in order to ascertain whether the decree could be supported. 12. ——— Direct evidence as opposed to suspicion—Adoption. The Sudder Ameen having held an adoption proved, the Principal Sudder Ameen on appeal reversed that decision on the facts. The case came before the High Court on special appeal, and the decision then given was appealed to England, and special leave was given by Her Majesty to appeal against the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen. The decision of the High Court on the law was admitted to be good, but the Judicial Committee reversed the finding of

13. ——— Second appeal—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 584, 585—Jurisdiction to hear a second appeal, on what matters—Secondary evidence, question of. Under ss. 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, a second appeal is confined to matters of law, usage having the force of law, or substantial defect in procedure. On an appeal to the Judicial Commissioner from a decree given on first appeal by an Appellate Court, and maintaining a finding of fact by the original Court, the only questions were (i) whether secondary evidence had been properly admitted on a case that had arisen for its admission; and (ii) whether the evidence offered constituted secondary evidence of the matter in dispute, which was the making of a document. Held, that (no special leave to appeal from the judgment of the Commissioner, the first Appellate Court, having been applied for) the facts were not open to decision on this appeal; this Committee could only do what the Judicial Commissioner on second appeal, under the above sections, could have done; and that, as the case stood, they were bound by the findings of facts of the first Appellate Court. 14. ——— Question in issue—Parties—Admission—Execution of deed. The plaintiff claimed to have inherited estate in the possession of the defendant, who was also related to the last owner, but who set up, independently of other title, a deed of gift from the latter in his favour. It was decided in the Appellate Court that, even if this deed had been executed, it was inoperative, and on this point the decision of the first Court was maintained. An issue having been fixed as to the execution, and the plaintiff also showing that the execution was disputed, their Lordships declined to treat the execution as not having been in contest. ANAND KUR v. TANSUKH

15. ——— Failure to produce evidence at hearing—Omission of Judge to call for record. At the hearing of a suit a party, though he had sufficient warning of what was necessary, did not take the proper steps to cause the production of the documentary and only admissible evidence of a material fact which had to be proved by him, and the decision was against him. The record of another proceeding would, it was said, have supplied this evidence; and an application had been previously made on which the order of the Judge was that "the matter would be decided when the case was tried, and the record would be sent for, if necessary." No further application to the Court was made, and no attempt to supply this evidence. Held, that, if there had been, as there might have been, an oversight by the party in not calling the attention of the Judge to the above order, and in not tendering the evid-

16. ——— Questions of boundary—

Miscarriage in conduct of decision. The Privy Council will never interfere with the finding of an Indian Court on a question of boundary, unless they are clearly satisfied that there has been some plain miscarriage in the conduct or decision of the case upon which they can put their hands and make the grounds for an order reversing or varying the decree. *RANGOPAL ROY v. ## 18. ——— Waiver—New point—Question not allowed to be raised on appeal—Question of fact decided by first Court against appellant, and not raised in High Court. Held, that a question of whether there had been or not a waiver of an irregularity in the conduct of a sale, which question had been decided by the first Court adversely to the appellants, and had not been submitted to the High Court for review could not be entertained on appeal to the Privy Council, being a question of fact which had not been subject to the consideration of the Court from whose decision the appeal was brought. *DHANTUKDHARI SINGH v. ## 19. ——— Circumstances to be taken into consideration in dealing with conflicting evidence—Courts in India differing as to question of fact—Question as to a mortgage being a real or fictitious transaction.—On the question whether a mortgage was a fictitious or a real transaction there was evidence on each side bearing directly on the character of the transaction, but on neither side was the evidence wholly convincing. Persons, whom one might have expected to be prominent witnesses, were not called, and the evidence given by those who were called was open to much adverse criticism. The Courts in India differed, the Subordinate Judge deciding that the mortgage was fictitious, and the High Court holding it to be a genuine transaction. Held, by the Judicial Committee that, in determining which story was to be accepted, it was necessary for their Lordships to rely largely upon surrounding circumstances, the position of the parties and their relation to one another, the motives which could govern their actions; and their subsequent conduct: and so dealing with the case their Lordships upheld the decision of the High Court. The fact that, if a genuine transaction, it was advantageous to the

1. ——— Presumption as to correctness of facts. 16. ——— Question as to disputed adoption—Reversal of concurrent Courts on fact. In a suit which involved a disputed question of fact as to an alleged adoption and the due execution of a will, the Courts in India, disregarding other evidence, relied solely upon the evidence of a witness examined at the instance of the first Court itself. The effect of the evidence of this witness was to show that, at the time of the adoption and execution of the will, the alleged testator was in a dying state, and although at times roused to consciousness, was, from his enfeebled mind, incapable of understanding the acts he was represented to have performed; the Courts below, however, on the evidence of this witness as to his testamentary capacity, corroborated, as they thought, by a letter of the widow of the alleged testator recognizing the adoption, and by her acquiescing in the performance of certain funeral rights of her deceased husband by the supposed adopted son, pronounced both the adoption and the will to be valid. Upon appeal, held that, although, as a general rule in a question of fact, the Judicial Committee were unwilling to disturb the judgment of the Court below, yet that, as it was the duty of the Appellate Court to weigh the evidence and probabilities, and form an independent judgment and taking into consideration the evidence regarding the state and capacity of the alleged adopter and testator, they were of opinion that the evidence relied upon was so unsatisfactory that neither of the decrees of the Courts below could be supported, and reversed the same with costs. 19. ——— Question as to evidence of custom—Question of fact. It having been alleged that an estate, by custom, descended to a single heir in the male line, the High Court, concurring with the Court of first instance, found that this custom had not been proved to prevail in the family. On an appeal contesting this finding, it was argued, among other objections, that the High Court had not given sufficient effect to an entry in the wajib-ul-urz of a zamindari village, the principal one comprised in the family estate now in dispute; the last owner of that estate, who held all the shares in the village, having caused an entry to be made to the effect that his eldest son should be his sole heir, the others of the family being maintained. The appeal was not taken out of the rule as to the concurrent findings of two Courts, primary and appellate, on a question of fact. MUHAMMAD ISMAIL KHAN v. FIDAYAT-UN-NISSA

20. ——— Wajib-ul-urz—Concurrent findings of Courts below. A custom of inheritance was alleged to prevail in an Oudh clan that, if the branch of a family became extinct, the other branches of it should take the estate amongst them in equal shares without regard to their degrees in kinship to the deceased. This custom was found not proved by the Original and Appellate Courts upon evidence of instances of succession in kindred families and of rights recorded in certain wajib-ul-urz. If there had been any principle of evidence not properly applied, or documentary evidence had been referred to, on which it could be shown that the Courts below had been led into error, the case might have been re-examined on this appeal, but in the absence of such ground this could not be done. Two Courts in concurrence found that there had been an agreement between two parties, interested in a family fund, that it should be divided into equal four parts among the four branches of the family, but that an unequal division, made under a decree, had resulted from unfair dealing. To contest upon this appeal those findings of fact, nothing was stated to make it appear to the Committee that, if they went through the whole of the evidence they would differ from the Courts below on anything but questions of pure fact. Accordingly, their Lordships were of opinion that the case fell within the rule which makes appellate tribunals reluctant to interfere, and in most cases makes them refuse to interfere, with concurrent findings of the Courts below. not disturbing concurrent findings of fact may be followed, notwithstanding that a part of the evidence in the suit has not been considered by the lower Court, when both Courts have arrived at the same result. In this case, however, the whole of the evidence having been brought to their notice, the Judicial Committee expressed their opinion that the Appellate Court below could not have decided otherwise than as it had decided. RAM LAL v. 23. ———— Necessity of there being gift and acceptance of the adopted child.—Hindu Law—Adoption. The Court of first instance and the Appellate Court, after observing fully upon the evidence, found that, although a ceremony of adoption had taken place, there had not in fact been a giving and taking of the child. There being no reason for departing from the ordinary course where two Courts have concurred, the above finding was accepted; and it was thereupon held that there had been no adoption. BIRESWAR MUKERJI v. 25. ———— Inferences of fact—Concurrent findings by two Courts below, not influenced by precisely the same considerations, upon the same evidence. It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations; a difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, necessarily leads to one and the same inference. NILMONI SINGH DEO v. 26. ———— Findings of fact on documentary evidence apart from construction. Against a claim for the proprietary right by inheritance brought by the nearest bandhu or cognate heir of the deceased, the defendant in possession set up his adoption by the widow under her husband's authority. The Courts below had found that no such authority had been given, and that the widow, not adopting to her husband, had adopted the defendant as her son. The Courts below had also concurred in finding against the fact of a dattaka adoption having taken place, which would have had the effect of removing one of the plaintiff's ancestors into another family, whereby a necessary link in the succession would have been lost to the plaintiff's title had this adoption been proved. As a ground for interference with these findings of fact, it was suggested that the evidence consisted, in a great measure, of documents of which the construction had been matter for decision, thus rendering the questions to be other than of fact, but it was held that they turned on the effect of the evidence afforded by the documents, and not on the construction, so that there was no reason for departing from the ordinary rule as to the concurrence of two Courts upon fact. LACHMAN LAL CHOWDHRI v. KANHAYA LAL MOWAR . . . I. L. R. 22 Calc. 609

27. ———— Effect of reception in evidence on appeal of documents rejected by first Court. The merits of a claim depended upon the authenticity of an anumati-patro (deed of permission to adopt) alleged to have been given to a widow by her husband. The first Court found that the instrument was not genuine. The High Court, on appeal, upheld this finding, but had considered relevant and admitted in evidence documents rejected by the first Court when tendered by the appellants. This reception of evidence afforded no reason for making the case an exception to the application of the rule, in the discretion of the Committee, against the disturbance of concurrent decisions upon a fact in issue below. HURRI BHUSAN MUKERJI v. UPENDRA LAL MUKERJI . . . I. L. R. 24 Calc. 1

28. ———— Want of legal necessity.—Hindu Law—Alienation by one of two co-widows. Two widows of the same husband, each having inherited her undivided share in the inheritance, disputed as to their rights therein. They then settled their dispute by a compromise, in which it was agreed that each had obtained absolute proprietary right in her share as a co-widow, and that division had been made between them. Having no power by this to affect the rights of the successor to the estate on their deaths, each was entitled to her share for her widow's estate only. Upon a mortgage made by the elder widow before her death, the mortgagee now claimed not only the interests of both the widows and thus to deprive the younger who had survived the other of her interests during her life, but also claimed a charge on the estate of inheritance in the land mortgaged. Against the competency of the elder widow to charge the estate of both and to bind the reversioner, both Courts below had decided. They had found that there had been no justifying necessity established by the evidence for the mortgage. These concurrent findings having been accepted by the Judicial Committee as correct in regard to the absence of necessity for the mortgage, they saw no occasion to say anything about any other questions as to the competency of the elder widow to mortgage the whole estate in the way in which she did. DHARAM CHAND LAL v. 29. — Courts basing decision on different grounds—One Court relying on oral, and the other on documentary, evidence. The rule of the Judicial Committee not to disturb a concurrent finding of fact by two Courts, unless it is clearly shown to be erroneous, is none the less applicable, although the Courts have not taken precisely the same view of the weight to be attached to each particular item of evidence. A case where one Court has relied on the oral, and the other on the documentary, evidence is within the rule. RAM ANUGRA NARAIN SINGH v. CHOWDHRY HANUMAN SAHAI (1902) . . . I. L. 30. — Privy Council—Concurrent decisions on fact—Disagreement of lower Courts as to circumstances leading up to conclusions—Appellate Court not affirming decision of first Court on all issues in the case. Where both Courts below had come to the same conclusion on the two main questions of fact in the case, which were sufficient to dispose of it, but had not agreed on all the circumstances which led up to such conclusion, and the Appellate Court had either differed from the first Court on other questions or had not decided them, the Judicial Committee, referring to the case of Umrao Begum v. Irsad Husain, L. R. 21 I. A. 163, 166 : I. L. R. 21 Calc. 997, declined to depart from the general rule as to concurrent findings of fact by the lower Courts. *SANWAL SINGH v. 31. — Privy Council—Concurrent decisions on fact—Disagreement of lower Courts as to circumstances leading up to conclusions—Appellate Court not affirming decision of first Court on all issues in the case. Where there are concurrent conclusions by both the lower Courts on questions of fact sufficient for the disposal of the case, the mere fact that the two Courts do not agree on all the steps which lead to one and the same conclusion is no reason for disregarding the rule as to concurrent findings of fact. But the fact that the Courts have differed on some important, though subordinate, questions is a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether the evidence before the lower Courts should be reviewed in detail. *CHITPAL SINGH v. ## 21. RE-HEARING.

1. — Grounds for re-hearing. An order passed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council after hearing an appeal is final; and an application for a re-hearing will not be granted except upon the ground that the applicant has, by some accident, without blame or default on his own part, not been heard, and the order has inadvertently been made as if he had been heard. In the matter of the appeal of PERTAB NARAIN SINGH v. SUBHAO KOOER

I. L. R. 4 Calc. 184 : L. R. 5 I. A. 171

2. — Irregularity in trial. An irregularity in a trial is no ground of complaint to the party at whose instance it was caused. The suspicion that a party who has failed to prove his case may prove more successful on a second and fuller investigation is no sufficient ground for directing a new trial. NITRASUR SINGH v. NUND LALL SINGH

1 W. R. P. C. 51 : 8 Moo. I. A. 109

3. — Laches of petitioner. There were four respondents in an appeal to the Privy Council. At the hearing, the appeal was allowed ex parte against all the respondents. One respondent afterwards petitioned for a re-hearing, on the ground that neither he nor his agents had notice that the appeal had been entered or fixed for hearing until after it had been decided. On inquiry, it appeared that the petitioner had inaccurately described the suit to his agents, as an appeal against himself only, without mentioning the names of the other respondents; and the agents, on being told at the Privy Council office that no appeal so entitled was pending, had taken no further steps. Held, that there had been omission and neglect on the petitioner's part and on the part of his agents such as to prevent the Judicial Committee from recommending a re-hearing of the case. *SWARNAMAYI v. 4. — Party accidentally prevented from being heard. In a petition for re-hearing of two appeals which had been fully heard upon their merits, and in which judgment had been given and reported to Her Majesty, and confirmed by regular orders in Council :—Held, that, assuming a relevant case of new matter had been made out, the decision was final, and the petition must be refused. There may be exceptional circumstances which will warrant this Board, even after an order of Her Majesty in Council has been made, in allowing a re-hearing at the instance of one of the parties; but this is an indulgence with a view mainly to doing justice when by some accident, without blame, the party has not been heard, and an order has been made inadvertently as if the party has been heard. *Rajunder Narain Rae v. in an appeal to the Queen in Council shall receive formal notice of the transmission of the record of the appeal, of the pendency whereof he has had notice. The mere allegation that the respondents in this appeal had, in consequence of their having had no express notice that the appeal had been set down for hearing, allowed the hearing of the appeal to take place ex parte was not considered sufficient to entitle them to a re-hearing thereof. LALTA PRASAD v. AZIZ-UD-DIN. I. L. R. 19 All. 209 L. R. 24 I. A. 49

6. ——— Infancy of party at the time of the hearing of appeal—“Res noviter.” There may be exceptional circumstances which will warrant the Judicial Committee in allowing, even after an order of Her Majesty in Council has issued upon their report, a re-hearing at the instance of one of the parties. But this is an indulgence with a view mainly to doing justice when by some accident, without any blame, the party has not been heard, and an order has been made, inadvertently as if he had been heard. In one of two appeals in suits relating to the same estate, judgment was given by the Judicial Committee after a hearing on the merits. In the other judgment was given to the same effect as in the first, it being conceded between the parties that the questions in both suits were the same. After both judgments had been reported to Her Majesty and confirmed by her orders in Council, a petition for a re-hearing was presented. Held, that, even assuming that a case of res noviter had been made out (which was not, however, the fact), the orders were final, and the petition must be rejected. *In re APPA RAO. The defendant's appeal to the Privy Council was decreed. Held, that the successful appellant was entitled to recover the property sold as abovementioned by means of an application under s. 244, read with s. 610 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and this right was not affected by the fact that the auction-purchasers were not parties to the decree of the Privy Council. *Gulzari Lal v. ## 24. COSTS.

1. ——— Discretion as to costs—Appeal—Bom. Reg. II of 1800, s. 7. When a discretion is vested in a Court as to costs, the Privy Council will not allow any appeal against the exercise of that discretion, because no appeal lies against a mere decree as to costs. But when a Court has no discretion to exercise in the matter (as when a suit was instituted by parties who had no right to institute it, as the person in whose name and on whose behalf they instituted it was dead at the time), costs must follow the decree according to s. 7, Regulation II of 1800 of the Bombay Code. *KEEMEE BAE v. 2. ——— Improper admission of evidence—Penalty on parties to appeal. The Privy Council, whilst lamenting the great latitude with which documentary evidence was received in India, held that it would be contrary to justice in any particular case to visit upon an individual penal consequences by way of costs, because the administration of justice was not more strictly conducted.

6. ——— Delay in appealing by which costs were incurred—Set-off of costs. Where, in a suit to have accounts re-opened, the Court at Calcutta found that the accounts ought to be opened, and referred the suit to the master, and the defendant did not appeal at once from this interlocutory order, but proceeded in the master's office in respect of the matters included in the accounts, but before the general report was made by the master he appealed to England from such interlocutory decree,—the Judicial Committee, in reversing the decree, ordered him to pay the costs of the proceedings in the master's office and remitted the cause to the Court below, with directions that the costs, payable to the defendant on the dismissal of the bill, and the costs payable by him consequent on his proceedings in the master's office should be set off one against the other, and the balance paid to the party entitled to the same. *McKELLAR v. 9. ——— Evidence—Costs—Co-sharers. One of two co-sharers by ancestral title in the under-proprietary right in certain villages obtained in 1870 decrees against the talukhdar for sub-settlement, and getting possession had his name entered in the khewat. The other co-sharer remained entitled to claim that this possession was held partly for him. The present suit was brought upon two agreements, purporting to have been made in 1870, between the two co-sharers, while proceedings to obtain the above decrees were pending, to the effect that, whereas both had claims against the talukhdar, one only was to sue him, the other paying half of the costs and being entitled to receive half of what might be decreed. The Judicial Committee upon the evidence concluded that the Appellate Court, attributing too much to certain omissions and acts on the plaintiff's part which were more or less explained, had erred in reversing the decree of the first Court, which maintained the agreements, depriving the plaintiff of his costs in that Court only. *MUHAMMAD YUSUF v. General rule as to refusal of leave to appeal in criminal cases—Misdirection of a jury not of itself a ground. Although in very special and exceptional circumstances leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council may be granted in a criminal case, no countenance was given to the view that an appeal would be allowed merely on the ground that the Judge trying the case had misdirected the jury. There was no reason to believe that there had been any misdirection by the Judge, or that he had, as he was alleged by the petitioner to have done, misconstrued, in charging the jury, a section of the Penal Code. ## 6. PROOF OF WILL.

1. ————— Evidence of execution of will—Hindu Wills Act, 1870—Procedure. It is incumbent on persons propounding a will for the purpose of obtaining probate or letters of administration under the Hindu Wills Act to produce all the evidence which the circumstances of the case indicate as proper and necessary to prove the execution of the will. TARA CHARAN CHUCKERBUTTY v. DEB NATH ROY . . . 10 C. L. R. 550

2. ————— Evidence of testator's knowledge of contents of will. Proof of execution and of the consciousness of a testator is insufficient; it should be further shown that he knew of and understood the contents of the document which he signed. *KUPPAYAMMAL v. 3. ————— Evidence. Probate is rightly granted where the Judge believes the witness who speaks to the execution of the will and the disposing mind of the testator. The rule in *Tyrrell v. 4. ————— Genuineness of will—Appearance and signatures—Probate, application for—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881). The High Court, considering it to have been proved by the evidence that the alleged testator was incapable, by reason of illness, of signing the will as firmly as it purported to be signed, found that the signatures were not genuine, and reversed the decree of the first Court which had granted probate. On appeal there was no view of the signatures, neither party having applied to have the originals transmitted, or to have photographs taken of them. But their Lordships found that the evidence did not warrant the conclusion that on the day on which the will purported to have been executed the testator physically and mentally was unable to execute it; but that there was sufficient evidence to establish the genuineness of the will and the capacity of the testator to make it, and that the evidence for the defence was not sufficient to destroy the petitioner's case on either of these points. *BAMASUNDARI DEBI v. 5. ————— Sufficiency of proof of will—Proof of execution of will. Having regard to the fact that a grant of probate is not irrevocable, and to the importance of a deceased testator's estate being represented as speedily as possible, prima facie proof of the execution of his will is sufficient to warrant the grant of a probate when the application for such probate is unopposed. In the matter of the petition of NOBODOORGA . . . 7 C. L. R. 367

6. ————— Proof of inofficious will—Knowledge of testator as to nature of his acts in making will. Where a will is inofficious in character, it is incumbent on the parties propounding it to prove it not only affirmatively, but completely, and by circumstances showing not only that the testator signed the will, but that he knew what he was doing, that he was making a will, and that he did all that he did with his eyes open. *SARODA SOONDUREE DOSSIA v. 7. ————— Internal evidence in will—Grant of probate unopposed—Ground for refusal of probate. Where an application for probate was unopposed, although a notice in the nature of a citation had been issued to the testator's widow, the Judge was held not to have been justified in rejecting the application merely upon internal evidence contained in the will. *SHUSTEE CHURN PATUK v. Hence an agreement or compromise as regards the genuineness and due execution of a will, if its effect is to exclude evidence in proof of the will, is not lawful within the meaning of s. 375 of the Code of Civil Procedure. *Evans v. 7. ————— Interest entitling person to apply for revocation—Hindu law—Inheritance—Succession to property of degraded and outcast woman—Right of her husband's family in her property acquired while degraded. In an application for revocation of probate of the will of K, which had been granted to D, it appeared that K was a Hindu widow, who many years ago left her husband's family dwelling house and became a woman of the town; that she had lived under the protection of D for 35 years; that when she came to D, she had no property, but that all the property she left had been acquired by her while in a degraded and outcast state. Held, that the applicant, as her husband's sister's son, had no interest in her estate entitling him to maintain the application. The general rule, that the tie of kindred between a woman's natural family and herself ceases when she becomes degraded and an outcast, applies with even greater force as between her and the members of her husband's family. Those members therefore have no right of inheritance in property acquired by a woman who leaves her husband's family and becomes degraded. In the goods of KAMNEY-MONEY BEWAH . . . . . I. L. 8. ————— Application to revoke probate—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Right of suit to revoke probate. A grant of probate of a will is not in the nature of a summary proceeding to be contested by a regular suit in the Civil Court. Persons who seek to contest a will must prove an interest to entitle them to a locus standi in Court, but the want of interest is an objection which should be taken at the earliest stage of the proceedings. The Court may look at the will to see if it affects the claim to maintenance. On J's death, the testator's brother D applied for letters of administration, and issued a citation to the appellant H N. H entered a caveat. No further proceedings were taken, and the matter remained pending. On H's death, D applied for a fresh citation to the appellant H N, but the District Judge held it to be unnecessary and declined to issue it. Letters of administration were then granted to D. The appellant H N subsequently applied for probate of the testator's will. The respondents filed caveats alleging that the will was void on the ground of certain bequests contained in it, and on this ground the District Judge refused probate of the will. Held, that the District Judge was wrong in refusing probate of the will on the ground that the bequests contained in it were illegal and void. Probate is only conclusive as to the appointment of executors and the validity and contents of the will; and in an application for probate it is not the province of the Court to go into the question of title with reference to the property of which the will purports to dispose, or the validity of such disposition. *HORMUSJI NAVROJI v. A obtained probate of the will, and entered upon the properties mentioned therein. Held, that the Court had no power, under s. 234 of the Succession Act, to revoke the probate upon the ground that A had since he took charge of the office, taken to an immoral course of conduct, and in consequence had been excluded from the community of mohunts. The proper course to take for depriving such a person of his office would be to bring a suit under the Religious Endowment Act, or any other suit, for a declaration that he had disqualified himself, and if in that suit a decree was obtained and duly certified to the Court which granted probate, that Court would, no doubt, direct the revocation of the probate. *In the matter of the petition of MOHUN DASS. 38. ————— Effect of probate—Revocation of probate—Grounds of refusal or revocation of probate—Filing of inventory and account—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 50 and 98. On the 7th August, 1897, one Baba Maharaj died at Poona, leaving his widow pregnant. By his will he appointed Bal Gangadhar Tilak (the appellant) and three others to be his executors. The will, after reciting the fact of his wife's pregnancy, provided that if no son was born or if one was born and should die prematurely, his wife should, with the advice of the executors, continue to manage the property on behalf of that son until he attained his majority. A posthumous son was born on 18th January, 1898. The executors obtained probate of the will on 16th February, 1898, and assumed the management of the estate. The son died on 9th March, 1898. Three years subsequently, viz., on 29th July, 1901, the widow applied to the District Court for revocation of the probate granted to the executors, on the grounds (i) that the will had become inoperative by the birth of her son, who had succeeded to the property, which on his death had devolved on her as his heir, and (ii) that the executors had wilfully and without reasonable cause omitted to file an inventory and account as required by s. 98 of the Probate Act (V of 1881). The District Judge granted the application, and revoked the probate. On appeal to the High Court: Held, that an order of revocation could not be made. The circumstances which had supervened with regard to the devolution of the property would not have justified the refusal of probate if they had existed at the time at which it was granted, and they were therefore no grounds for its revocation. Held, also, that the mere omission by the executors to file the inventory and account required by s. 98 of the Probate Act (V of 1881) was not a ground for revocation. There was no circumstance in the case from which wilful omission on the part of the executors could be inferred. The grant of probate is decisive only of the genuineness of the will propounded, and of the right of the executors thereby appointed to represent the estate of the testator. It in no respect decides any question as to the disposing power of the testator or as to the existence of any disposable property. The words "become useless and inoperative," in s. 50, cl. 41, of the Probate Act (V of 1881), imply the discovery of something which, if known at the date of the grant, would have been a ground for refusing it, e.g., the discovery of a later will or codicil, or subsequent discovery that the will was forged, or that the alleged testator is still living. *BAL GANGADHAR TILAK v. Where the petitioner applied for the revocation of a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed on the ground of fraud, the fraud originally alleged being collusion between the parties to the proceedings, in which the grant was made. Held, that, having failed to make out the case of fraud, she was not entitled to go into the question whether the will was a forgery, and that her application for revocation was rightly dismissed. A decision dismissing an application made by the widow and heiress of the deceased testator for revocation of letters of administration with the will annexed, which had been granted to his mother, is binding on the daughter, who would if the will were set aside, be the next heir, unless, the latter can make out that there was collusion between the mother and the widow of the testator. *DURGAGATI DEBI v. Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) are now (with the exception of s. 187) removed from that Act by s. 154 of Act V of 1881, but are, with the exception of s. 187, re-enacted verbatim in Act V of 1881. S. 187, however, still remains incorporated by reference with the Hindu Wills Act (see s. 154 of Act V of 1881). The result is that probate is necessary in case of such Hindu wills as fall within the Hindu Wills Act. But the omission from Act V of 1881 (which applies to all Mahomedans and Hindus) of any section corresponding to s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act, and the retention of that section in the Hindu Wills Act, shows that it was the intention of the Legislature that, except in cases falling under the Hindu Wills Act, an executor of any Hindu or Mahomedan will may establish his right in a Court of justice without taking out probate. In cases, however, falling within the provisions of Act XXVII of 1860, debtors, have still the right (under s. 2 of that Act) of insisting upon a plaintiff executor taking out probate. Where A, one of three executors of a Mahomedan will, none of whom had taken out probate, desired to carry on a suit originally instituted by their testator to recover a share of an estate, all the other parties to the suit being desirous that the suit should be dismissed:—Held, that A, under s. 92 of the Probate Act (V of 1881), being only one of three executors, could not carry on the suit without first taking out probate of the testator's will. Held, further, that A, being an executor, had a right to carry on the suit and get in the assets of his testator in order to meet possible claims on the estate. The other parties to the suit who were beneficially interested in the estate, and, who desired that the suit should terminate, had the remedy in their hands by putting the executor in funds to discharge the debts. *MOOSA v. He left a widow B, and a minor son M. At his death he made a will bequeathing his property to his son, and appointing certain executors to manage the property during the son's minority. The son died in 1877, leaving a minor widow, M G. In 1879 one of the executors obtained probate of L's will from the High Court. In 1884 a suit was filed on behalf of the minor M G, against her mother-in-law B to recover possession of the property covered by the will of L. One of the defences to this suit was that the property in dispute had vested in the executor, who had obtained probate of the will, and that, as the defendant held the estate under the executor, the suit was not maintainable without impleading the executor. Held, that the executor was not a necessary party to the suit. S. 179 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) as incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) did not apply so far as it related to property outside Bombay. The property in dispute was situate in the Surat district. It was joint ancestral property. On the father's death, it vested in the son by survivorship, and on the son's death it vested in the son's widow, the plaintiff, in the present suit. Under the provisions, therefore, of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 4 (if that Act can be held to operate at all in the mofussil before a notification is issued under s. 2), the estate could not vest in the executor, as it had passed by survivorship to another person long before the Act came into operation. *BAI HARKOR v. Under that system a Hindu or Mahomedan executor took no title to property merely as such by virtue of the probate. In the case of Mahomedan executors such a title was created for the first time by the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881). Since by Mahomedan law a testator has power only to dispose of one-third of his property, an executor of a Mahomedan will, who had obtained probate under Act V of 1881, is a bare trustee for the heirs as to two-thirds of the estate, when realized, and an active trustee as to one-third for the purposes of the will; and of these trusts one is created by the Act and the Probate irrespective of the will and the other by the will established by the probate. The effect of probate of a Mahomedan will granted under that Act is limited to the effect given to it by the terms of the Act itself. These terms (contained in s. 59. and s. 4 supplemented by s. 88) cannot be applied so as to give the probate the effect of an estoppel as to the will and its contents. The will of a Mahomedan lady, widow of the late King of Oudh, confirmed a release, which she had executed in favour of the principal defendant, who had been for some years in her household as her confidential agent and manager of her affairs, by which she declared that certain property he had obtained from her was a free and absolute gift and that neither she nor her heirs had any claim or demand on him in respect of it. Probate of the will was granted to the Administrator-General, the executor appointed by it, the grant being opposed by her heirs the plaintiffs, who pending the probate proceedings instituted a suit, in which they claimed to set aside the release and prayed for an account and for two-thirds of the property of the testatrix. Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that the grant of probate did not, under the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act, create any such estoppel as to prevent the plaintiffs from denying the validity of the confirmation of the release to the defendant contained in the will. It was also contended that an estoppel arose from the decision in the proceedings for probate, which constituted a res judicata under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), but the probate proceedings were not in evidence, and their Lordships held that in their absence there was no sufficient evidence to support the estoppel. *KURRUTULAIN BAHADUR v. ACT (V OF 1881)—*contd.

Unorthodox practices, effect of—Evidence of execution of will. A Sikh is a "Hindu" within the meaning of that term as used in s. 2 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881). An application therefore for probate of the will of a Sikh testator was held to have been rightly granted under that Act. Since the case of Doe dem. Kishenchunder Shaw v. Baidam Beebee, 2 Morley's Digest 22, the view that Sikhs are Hindus has always been acted upon by the Courts in India, which have applied the Hindu law to them (as in the case of Jains) in the absence of custom varying that law. That application of the law was based upon the view that Sikhs were Hindus within the meaning of the early legislation on the subject, and not upon the alternative rule of "justice, equity and good conscience" also sanctioned by that legislation. In s. 331 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), the term "Hindu" is used in the same wide sense as in the earlier enactments and includes Sikhs. A Sikh or Hindu by becoming a member of the Brahmo Samaj does not necessarily cease to belong to the community in which he was born. In this case, however, it was found on the evidence that the testator, a Sikh by birth, never became a professed Brahmo. Departures by the testator, from the standard of orthodoxy binding upon him in matters of diet and ceremonial observances, assuming them to be established, were held not to have the effect of excluding him from the category of "Hindu" in the Probate and Administration Act, he having been born within such category, and never having become otherwise separated from the religious communion in which he was born. Objections having been taken that the will had not been duly executed, and that alterations had been made in it since its execution, the Judicial Committee (affirming the decision of the Chief) decided on the evidence in favour of its due execution in the form in which it was produced to the Court on the application for probate. *BHAGWAN KOER v. 1. Just cause—Revocation of probate—Omission to file inventory—Special citation—Onus—Procedure. To successfully maintain an application for revocation of probate under s. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act on the ground of the omission of an executor or administrator to file an inventory or account, it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Judge that the omission was wilful or without reasonable cause. Mere omission to serve a special citation would not by itself be a sufficient ground for revoking the grant, if it is shown that the person, on whom the citation ought to have been served, had knowledge of the application for probate. The onus of proving that he had such knowledge rests on the party, who alleges it, and it is not necessary for the party, who applies for the revocation of the grant, to prove not only that no special citation was served on him, but also that he had no knowledge of the proceedings. When a Judge is satisfied that a summary grant made without service of special citation ought not to have been made, he ought not to order revocation directly, but should call upon the applicant for the grant to prove in solemn form. PREM CHAND DAS v. English practice and practice of mofussil Courts in India distinguished. Held, further, that a previous application for revocation by the widow of the deceased having failed, that decision bound reversioner, and the latter's application for revocation could not succeed except upon proof that the previous proceeding had been collusive and fraudulent. *Katama Natchier v. Where an applicant for probate of a will took out citation upon a minor, who was represented by the applicant herself as guardian: Held, that the proceedings to obtain the grant were defective in substance and the grant should be revoked. The fact that the petitioner for revocation of probate was acting in concert with somebody else could not take away the right which she otherwise possessed of applying for revocation. *SHOROSHIBALA DEBI v. A person interested in the estate of the deceased by assignment from his widow (who is his next heir) may, where a will has been set up and proved at variance with his interests, apply for the revocation of probate under s. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act. The expression "order" in s. 86 of the Probate and Administration Act does not mean such an order only as is referred to in s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code. An application under s. 50 of the Probate and Administration Act must be treated under the provisions of ss. 55 and 83 as a suit, and when such a suit is dismissed on the ground that the applicant had no locus standi to bring the suit, such decision amounts to a decree and an appeal lies to the High Court against such decree. *AZIM v. Therefore the provision of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869), by which a probate matter can be tried in the first instance by the Assistant Judge and by which the appeal in cases where the amount of the subject-matter does not exceed Rs. 5,000 will lie to the District Court is one which the Local Legislature was competent to make. In so far as the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act are inconsistent with those of the amendments introduced into the Bombay Civil Courts Act by Bombay Act I of 1900, the provisions of the first-mentioned Act must be taken to have been impliedly repealed for this Presidency. *LAXMI v. All that the District Judge has to do under the section is to see that the inventory and account prima facie satisfy its requirements. In 1899 an executor exhibited in the Court of the District Judge, under s. 98 of the Probate and Administration Act, an account of the estate of the testator for one year, from the grant of probate; and the then District Judge recorded the order—"Accounts checked and reported to be correct"—on it. 1. ————— Refusal of Court of first instance to examine all the plaintiff's witnesses—Appeal by defendant decreed—Remand.
Owing to the direction of the Court of first instance only a portion of the evidence available in support of the plaintiff's case was recorded by that Court, which decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, however, the lower Appellate Court took a different view of the plaintiff's evidence and dismissed the suit. Held, that the plaintiff should be given an opportunity of producing the evidence, which had not been recorded owing to the attitude taken up by the Court of first instance. *Kijayat-ullah

2. ————— Relief granted which was not asked for by the plaintiffs—Appeal—Court-fee. The plaintiffs in a suit for sale on a mortgage were granted by the first Court a relief for which they had not asked and which could not properly have been granted to them without an amendment of the plaint. On appeal by one of the defendants the appellant was made to pay an additional Court-fee corresponding to the relief granted to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs respondents were also required to make good the deficiency in the Court-fee paid in the first Court.
This the plaintiffs declined to do, unless the decree was confirmed in its entirety. Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to retain the full benefit of the first Court's decree nor liable to pay the additional Court-fee; and the appellant might on application to the proper authority obtain a refund of the excess Court-fee, which he had been erroneously compelled to pay. *INDRA SEN SINGH v.

Public worship of idol—Claim to exclusive right to have procession in public streets—Dispute between rival sects of Vaishnava Brahmins—Streets vested in Local Boards under Madras Local Boards Act (Madras Act V of 1884)—Res judicata—Ownership of land in village—Presumptive dedication to idol. The plaintiffs, members of the community of the Vadagalai sect of Vaishnava Brahmins, claimed the exclusive right to public worship of their idol and processions in its honour in the public streets of the village where they resided, and to prohibit the defendants, members of the Tungalai sect in the same village, from publicly worshipping the Tungalai idol or carrying it in processions in the public streets. The claim was based on the grounds (i) that the Vadagalais were the original owners of all the land of the village and only allowed houses to be built and streets formed subject to the reservation that no worship or procession of a Tungalai idol should be allowed in them, thus dedicating them to their own idol; (ii) that, in the alternative, they had by immemorial usage and custom the right to prevent such worship or processions in the streets; and (iii) that so far as the Tungalai idol was concerned the rights of the parties were res judicata by the decision in a former suit:—Held, that the ownership of the village by the Vadagalais was not proved nor any dedication of the streets exclusively to their idol; and that no such custom as alleged had been established; the village was an ordinary ryotwari village; the streets were public streets now vested, under the Madras Local Boards Act (Madras Act V of 1884), in the Local Board. All members of the public had an equal right in them. If the Vadagalais had any objection to the streets being so vested, they had had the opportunity when the Act was passed of raising the objection by appeal to the Governor-General in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Not having done so it was now too late to set up any claim. Held, also, that the former suit was not a representative suit binding property, nor a suit framed for the purpose of binding the Tungalai sect for all time. It was a suit against certain persons alleged to be wrong-

Annexed to it was a copy of an extract from the plaintiff's account books. The matter was adjourned to the 2nd June 1897 for the production of the account books, in order that the copy might be compared and verified. On that day neither the plaintiff nor his pleader appeared with the books, whereupon the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint, holding that no summons could be issued unless the copy extract annexed to the plaint was found to be correct. Held (reversing the order), that, the plaint having been registered on the 14th April, summonses ought to have been issued on the 2nd June. There was no provision in the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) justifying the rejection of the plaint. 14. Omission to put copy on record. In a suit brought on a promissory note, where the note was produced when the plaint was presented and was marked by the officer of the Court, but the Judge at the hearing refused to receive it when tendered in evidence, because he found that there was no copy of the note among the papers, and the plaintiff's counsel was unable to explain the omission, and there being no application made to withdraw, the suit was dismissed:—Held, that the Judge ought to have received a note in evidence which was "produced in Court by the plaintiff when the plaint was presented" (s. 39 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1859); that the plaintiff's counsel was not bound, under the circumstances, to apply to withdraw the suit, and the Judge was not justified in dismissing the suit, which was accordingly remanded under s. 351 of the Code, with a direction that it should be restored to its original place on the register, and be tried by one of the Judges of the Court. THOMPSON v. attended the Court, but did not produce the document, stating on oath that it was not in his possession. But his statement was disbelieved, and the Court fined him R75 under s. 174 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Held, that the fine was illegally levied. The jurisdiction of the Court to punish under s. 374 of the Civil Procedure Code exists only in the case of a witness, who, not having attended on summons, has been arrested and brought before the Court. The case of a witness who having a document will not produce it is provided for by s. 175 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) and s. 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). In re PREMCHAND DOWLATRAM

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 94, 96, 517, 523—Security required for production of ornaments—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 404. Executive order. When a Magistrate thinks that there are in a person's possession articles in respect of which some criminal offence has been committed, he should, in order to secure their production, proceed under s. 94 or 96 or any other appropriate section of the Criminal Procedure Code. No section of the Code enables him to demand security, from the person in possession of the articles, for their production when required. Where, on a complaint made by one B.M., the Magistrate ordered a preliminary inquiry into it by a Subordinate Magistrate, and, after receiving that report, passed an order to the following effect: "PB is to execute a surety-bond to the extent of R400 and to hold the ornaments in deposit with him as trust, and to produce them when required. In the meantime the complainant should have his claim proved by a competent Court": Held, that the order, having been made in a matter which had come before the Magistrate in his judicial capacity, could not be regarded as an executive order merely, and that, as a judicial order, it was made without jurisdiction. Held, also, that, if the Magistrate did not think fit to take proper steps under the law to secure the production of the property before the Court, the only course which was open to him, when he referred the complainant to the Civil Court, was to leave it to the Civil Court to take such steps as it might think fit for the production and custody of the property in question. PURNA CHANDRA BANDOPADHYA v. promissory note of the defendants for R2,125. The note was in Gujarati, in the form of an account, on a loose sheet of paper. After reciting that the defendant had borrowed the said sum of R2,125 on personal security, and that interest was to run there on at a specified rate, the document continued as follows: "The same (i.e., the sum borrowed with interest) are payable whenever dhani (the owner or lender) may demand payment thereof." The defendant contended that the note in question was in form one payable to "bearer on demand," and as such illegal and void, as being in contravention of the provisions of s. 25 of the Paper Currency Act (XX of 1882). Held, that dhani was not in the ordinary or the commercial language of the Bombay Presidency equivalent to "bearer" in the sense that word was employed in the Paper Currency and Negotiable Instruments Acts, and that the document in question was not therefore a negotiable instrument, nor obnoxious to the provisions of the former Act, and there was no objection to a suit founded upon it. *JETHA PARKHA v. 1. ——— Note given in payment of loss on wagering contract—Act XXI of 1848—Bom. Act III of 1865. A promissory note which has for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is not binding in the hands of the original payee. TRIKAM DAMODHAR v. LALA AMIRCHAND . . . . . 8 Bom. A. C. 131

2. ——— Note given partly for "balance of bets and lotteries"—Lottery Act (V of 1844). The defendant agreed with the plaintiff to take the plaintiff's mare "Bridesmaid" on "racing terms"—all winnings to be divided equally between them, and the plaintiff to have the option of claiming a one-fourth share of any lottery in which she might be bought by or on account of the defendant; the plaintiff to keep and train "Bridesmaid" for R60 a month. Subsequently, the plaintiff agreed to keep and train, for a like sum for each horse, five horses belonging to the defendant. The defendant having been posted as a defaulter, the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, advanced certain sums to the Secretary of the Calcutta Races to enable the defendant's horses to run. As security for the repayment of such advances, and of a sum of R4,456-6 which had become due to the plaintiff, and which included an item of R1,149 for "balance of bets and lotteries," and a smaller sum in respect of certain tickets in the "Secundra Raffle," the defendant gave to the plaintiff a letter of hypothecation of his five horses, whereby it was agreed that in case of the defendant's default the plaintiff should be at liberty to sell the horses. The defendant made default, and the plaintiff advertised the horses for sale. On the same day the defendant wrote and gave to the plaintiff a letter stating that, in consideration of the plaintiff's withdrawing the advertisement, and withholding the sale for a certain period, he would give the plaintiff a promissory note for the balance of his claim. A note for R7,000 was accordingly given by the defendant to the plaintiff. In the account delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant, he had by mistake overcredited the defendant with R744 in an item headed "cash received from the Secretary of the Calcutta Races, balance of racing account" and under which was included the following item: "I. O. U., deducted from lottery account, R480." On receiving information of the error, the defendant gave the plaintiff another promissory note for R744. In an action on the notes brought under Act V of 1866, the plaintiff obtained a decree, which was set aside on the defendant's application, and leave was given to him to appear and defend. Written statements were then filed on the plaintiff's application. Held, by MACPHERSON, J., that the two promissory notes were given as security for the whole of the plaintiff's claim; that the items for "balance of bets and lotteries" and for the "Secundra Raffle" being rendered illegal by the Lottery Act (V of 1844), part of the consideration for the notes was illegal, and no action was maintainable upon them. His Lordship therefore dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, held by COUTH, C.J., that the promissory note for R7,000 was not vitiated by the R1,149 being part of the consideration for it: although that portion of the latter sum which was won by lotteries was obtained by an illegal transaction, it was not illegal for the defendant to receive the money, and, having done so, to pay the plaintiff his share or to promise to do so. But the money paid in respect of the "Secundra Raffle," being money paid in execution of an illegal purpose, was an illegal consideration which disentitled the plaintiff to recover on the note. Held, further, that the note for R744 was given upon good consideration. All the facts of the case being stated in the plaintiff's written statement, the Court might allow the plaint to be amended, and frame an issue as to what amount was due to the plaintiff in respect of the consideration for the note for R7,000. Held, by MARKBY, J., that both notes were good, inasmuch as the promise contained in them did not spring from, nor was it the creature of, the original illegal agreement, but was a separate agreement. 3. ——— Promissory note on account of pre-existing loan—Action maintainable on original consideration, even if note unstamped and inadmissible. Where a bill or note is not itself the original contract, but is executed on account of a pre-existing independent obligation complete in itself, an action on the original obligation is maintainable without regard to such bill or note, if it is not paid at maturity, provided the party taking the bill or note has done nothing with it, which would render the debtor liable on it to third parties and the inadmissibility in evidence from any cause of such bill or note will not affect the maintainability of the suit. 2 C. W. N. 286

5. ——— Suit by endorsee against maker—Endorsement of overdue note. In a suit by endorsee against the maker of a promissory note payable on demand, the defence was that there were dealings in skins between the defendant and the payee, and an agreement was made by which the payee was to pay the defendant R4,500 as an advance upon goods to be supplied by the defendant to the payee; that the money was paid and the promissory note sued on was made, and delivered as an acknowledgment of the receipt of the money and as a security for what should be due to the maker in respect of the dealings. The defendant stated that the state of the accounts between him and the maker showed a balance in favour of the defendant, and notice to the plaintiff of these facts was alleged. The note was endorsed to the plaintiff two years and eleven months after date. Held, that, although the evidence failed to make out notice to the plaintiff, the note when endorsed was an overdue note, and that the plaintiff took it subject to the then state of the accounts between the payee and the defendant. 6. ——— Endorsement of note overdue—Note on demand—Re-endorsement. Before a promissory note on demand can be treated as overdue in the hands of an endorsee, there must be some evidence of demand. The re-endorsement of a discharged promissory note cannot revive the liability of the maker. Commundun Mohideen Saib v. Oree Meerah Saib, 7 Mad. 271, followed. 8. ———— Suit to recover money due on a promissory note by assignee of rights of payee not being endorsee—Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, ss. 8, 9. K executed a promissory note on demand for Rs. 6,000 in favour of S in 1882. In 1884 S by an agreement in writing assigned all her property, including the promissory note to M, but did not endorse over the promissory note to M. M assigned his rights in the promissory note to a bank in payment of a debt. In a suit by M and the bank against K and S to recover the principal and interest due on the note:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not maintain the suit. PATTAT AMBADI MARAR v. KRISHNAN

9. ———— Suit by assignee by invalid endorsement—Claim also on the original debt in respect of which note was given—Maintainability of suit. The purchaser of the assets of a bank in liquidation, which assets included a debt due by defendants to the late bank and a promissory note given in respect of that debt, sued defendants on the promissory note as well as on the original debt in respect of which the note had been given. The note had not been endorsed until after the bank had been wound up and had ceased to exist, and the endorsement had been held to be invalid. Held, that plaintiffs were entitled to sue for the original debt even though they were not entitled to sue on the promissory note. Pothi Reddi v. Velayudasivan, I. L. R. 10 Mad. 94, referred to. RAMCHANDRA RAO v. VENKATARAMANA AYYAR

10. ———— Bill of exchange—Endorser of note or bill, rights of—Right to securities deposited of endorser paying the holder of note or bill—Surety. The same rule is applicable to the endorser of a promissory note that applies to the endorser of a bill-of-exchange, that, if he pays the holder of it, he is entitled to the benefit of the securities given by the maker in the one case, the acceptor in the other, which the holder has in his hands at the time of the payment, and upon which he has no claim except for the note or bill. Duncan Fox & Co. v. North and South Wales Bank, L. R. 6 Ap. Cas. 1, referred to. Promissory notes made by an agent, acting for himself and for his principal, were secured by the deposit of title-deeds of property, belonging to the principal, in the hands of a bank which discounted the notes, and the latter were paid at maturity by an endorser. Held, that the endorser was entitled to a transfer of the deeds to him as security, without further assent from the owner. Held, also, that he was entitled to have them transferred to him on the ground that, as a fact, the agent, acting within the principal's authority, had agreed that in consideration of his paying the amount of the notes to the holder, he should have this security, the bank assenting. *AGA AHMED ISPAHANI v. 11. ———— Liability of maker, discharge of—Failure to present note at due date. Semble: The maker of a promissory note is not discharged by the holder's failure to present it at due date. RAMAKISTNAYYA v. KASSIM

12. ———— Promissory note not presented for payment at maturity—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 64, 66—Effect of non-presentment. Held, that the non-presentment for payment at maturity of a promissory note, the presentment of which is required by s. 66 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, has not the effect of relieving from liability the maker of the note. Farzand Ali v. Agra Savings Bank, All. Weekly Notes (1896) 201, and Ramakistnayya v. Kassim, I. L. R. 13 Mad. 172, followed. PHUL CHAND v. GANGA GHULAM, I. L. R. 21 All. 450

13. ———— Effect of an invalid endorsement of a promissory note by payee—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 46—Note recovered by, but not re-indorsed to, the payee. The defendant gave plaintiffs a promissory note payable on demand. The plaintiff endorsed the note to a third party, a creditor of his, who sued the defendant on the note on his refusal to pay the defendant pleaded that it had been agreed between the payee and himself that the note should not take effect until the payee had performed certain conditions which remained unperformed. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff thereupon paid the endorsee and took back the note, which, however, was not re-indorsed, and instituted the present suit against the defendant, who pleaded that the property in the note was not vested in the original plaintiff so as to enable him to maintain the suit. On the decease of the plaintiff before the trial, his sons were substituted as plaintiffs. Held, that, although the property in a promissory note payable to order on demand passes by endorsement and delivery (Act XXVI of 1881, s. 46), the endorsement in this case had been declared invalid in the suit referred to, and must therefore be treated as cancelled, and consequently the property in the note was vested in the plaintiff at the date of the suit so as to enable him to maintain it. *MARIMUTHU PILLAI v. 14. ——— Assignment by payee of all his property including the promissory note—Negotiation—Absence of endorsement—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 8 and 9. A promissory note payable to payee or order cannot be negotiated by the mere assignment by the payee of all his property including the note. *Pattat Ambodi Marar v. 15. ——— Contemporaneous collateral agreement consistent with the terms of the promissory note—Right of suit under Ch. XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiffs advanced money to defendant for the supply of certain goods. On defendant's failure to supply the goods, plaintiffs pressed for repayment, and a promissory note payable on demand for the amount due, was executed; at the same time an agreement entered into by defendant to liquidate the amount due on the promissory note by fortnightly consignments, the consignment to be made within fourteen days of the date of the promissory note. On defendant's failure to send the consignments as promised, a suit was brought under Ch. XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code. Held, that the suit was rightly filed under Ch. XXXIX; that the agreement to liquidate the amount due by fortnightly consignments was a collateral undertaking consistent with the existence of the note containing an absolute promise to pay; that such collateral agreement was no answer to the suit on the promissory note; and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. SIMON v. MAHOMED SHERIFF

16. ——— Promissory note by member of an undivided Hindu family—Liability of other member—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 4, 26, 27. The maker of a promissory note (executed in plaintiff's favour), being a member of an undivided Hindu family, had borrowed from plaintiff the money represented by the note and purchased therewith land for the benefit of the family, which consisted of himself (the maker of note), an uncle, and the sons of the uncle. The uncle had always recognized the debt as a family debt, and the land purchased with the money borrowed had, in a subsequent division of property, been allotted to the uncle and his sons, who had also agreed with the maker of the note that they would discharge the debt. On a suit being brought against the maker of the note, as well as the uncle and his sons:—Held, per SHEPHARD and SUBRAHMANIA

PROMISSORY NOTE—contd.*4. ASSIGNMENT OF, AND SUITS ON, PROMISSORY NOTES—contd.

AYYAR, J.J. (DAVIES, J., dissenting), that all the members of the undivided family were liable. Per SUBRAHMANIA AYYAR, J.—Even assuming that the maker of the note was not the manager of the family he was the agent of his co-parceners when buying the land and raising the loan, and his acts as such agent bound the uncle who expressly assented to them; also that, inasmuch as the uncle was liable, his sons must be also held liable for the debt to the extent to which they were interested in the family property, and that even if they were minors when the money was borrowed. Whether, having regard to ss. 233 and 234 of the Indian Contract Act, a principal cannot be proceeded against upon a negotiable instrument executed by an agent in his own name. Quære: Per DAVIES, J.—(i) Had the suit been brought on a bond, or on the debt of which the promissory note afforded evidence, other members of the family might have been held liable as well as the maker of the note, on the ground that the latter represented them. But in the case of a suit on a promissory note (as this suit was) no such representation could be alleged unless the persons said to be represented appeared by name on the face of the document; (ii) where the name of only one person appears on a promissory note and he does not purport to make it on behalf of any one but himself, none but the maker can be held liable to discharge it. KRISHNA AYYAR v. KRISHNASAMI AYYAR

17. ——— Endorsement—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 51—Promissory note in favour of two payees—Endorsement by one in favour of the other—Suit by endorsee as such—Maintainability—Suit by endorsee as assignee of chose in action—Endorsement, evidence of assignment. Where a promissory note has been made in favour of two payees, one of whom endorses it to the other, the endorsee cannot sue on the note as endorsee or as one of two joint payees. He may, however, maintain a suit, in respect of the amount due under the note, as assignee of the chose in action. Though such an endorsement cannot operate as an endorsement under the law merchant, it may be relied on as evidence of an assignment by way of release in favour of the endorsee. Rule 428 of the Rules of Procedure of the Presidency Small Cause Court is not ultra vires. MUHAMMAD KUMARHALLY v. RANGA RAO (1901)

18. ——— False or forged note—Debt—Suit for recovery of Promissory note false or forged—Whether plaintiff can succeed on proof of loan. Where the plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of money, on the allegation that the defendant had taken from the plaintiffs a loan by executing a note in favour of one of the plaintiffs:—Held, that, even if the promissory note be a forgery, the plaintiffs would succeed if they could prove the loan by independent evidence. *MOITI LAL SAHA v. Presumption of payment arising from possession of note by debtor—Evidence rebutting presumption—Books of account kept in course of business—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 31. In a suit on a promissory note, where the note and the security for its payment were in the possession of the defendant:—Held, that, under the circumstances of this case, as shown by the evidence, the prima facie presumption that the note had been paid was rebutted. Books regularly kept in the course of business can, under the Evidence Act, be used, not only for the purpose of refreshing the memory of a witness, but also as corroborative evidence of the story he tells. *BHOG HONG KONG v. Indorsee with notice of covenant may sue. A collateral covenant not to sue for a limited time on a promissory note does not suspend the right of action on the note and cannot be pleaded in bar to an action on the note. Thimbleby v. Barron, 3 M. & W. 210, referred to and followed. Ray v. Jones 9 C. B. R. N. S. 416, referred to and followed. The payee of the promissory note executed an agreement in the following terms:—"You will ever from the 1st of May be paying interest to me on account of the (promissory) note for Rs. 5,000 executed this day by you in my favour, the interest for every month being sent on the first of the next month. I shall take the above rupees five thousand from you after giving jivanamsam (maintenance money) to my mother-in-law, and obtaining a release bond; or I will take the said rupees five thousand after the lifetime of my mother-in-law." Held, that this agreement was only a collateral covenant not to sue for a limited time and was no bar to an action by an indorsee with notice of the agreement. *SOMASUNDARAM CHETTIAR v. 1. — Registration of prostitutes—Act XIV of 1868, ss. 11 and 21—Jurisdiction of Magistrates to entertain pleas of irregularity in the registry—Possession of registry ticket. Under Act XIV of 1868, the police are not empowered to put a woman on the register of "common prostitutes" against her will. The penalty prescribed by s. 11, Act XIV of 1868, for disobedience of any of its rules is for a "woman who voluntarily registers herself as a common prostitute." A Magistrate has authority to hear any objection urged by a woman charged with disobedience of the rules under Act XIV of 1868 against the legality of her registry, or that she is not a common prostitute. The possession of a registry ticket is not sufficient evidence of being a common prostitute. In the case of LAKHIMANI RAUR . 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 70

Where a woman is prosecuted before a Magistrate under s. 11 of Act XIV of 1868, she is not precluded from pleading that she has ceased to be a common prostitute and that she has taken steps, under s. 21 and the rules framed thereunder, for the removal of her name from the register; and the Magistrate is

ss. 2 (4), 4—Compulsory deposit—Provident Fund—Contributions by a servant—Liability of the contributions to be attached on the servants leaving the Railway Company's service—Attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 278. The contribution, which the employé of a Railway Company makes towards the Railway Provident Fund, governed by the provisions of the Provident Fund Act (IX of 1897), is a "compulsory deposit" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Provident Funds Act (IX of 1897, as amended by Act IV of 1903). The deposit does not cease to be compulsory, when the employé leaves the service of the Company, since it was not, when made, repayable on demand, and was, therefore, at that time a "compulsory deposit;" and having once acquired that character with the attendant consequences it continued to retain it. A "compulsory deposit" of the above description does not become liable to be attached under s. 268 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), on the subscriber's leaving the Company's service. The expression "compulsory deposit," as used in the Provident Funds Act (IX of 1897, as amended by Act IV of 1903), is not merely descriptive of the sum deposited, but is a term of art, which by virtue of legislative provision includes that which is not within its natural meaning; for, under s. 2, cl. 4 of the Act, it includes "any contribution which may have been credited in respect of, and any interest or increment which may have accrued on, such subscription or deposit under

s. 4—Insolvent Debtors' Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21), ss. 7, 30—Vesting order—Sum due to an insolvent from a Provident Institution—Right of Official Assignee to claim—Construction of Statutes—Distinction between enactments affecting vested rights and those regulating procedure. A member of a Railway Provident Institution, who had made compulsory deposits therein, became insolvent, and the usual vesting order was made under s. 7 of the Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors. By the rules of that Institution, a member is to be paid, on his retirement from service, the sum of money standing to his credit. At the date of the vesting order, the insolvent had not yet retired from service. Subsequently to the date of the vesting order but before the retirement of the insolvent, the Provident Funds Act, 1897, came into force, s. 4 of which provides that, after the commencement of that Act, the Official Assignee shall not be entitled to or claim any such compulsory deposits in any Railway Provident Fund. On a claim being made by the Official Assignee to the amount, on the ground that when the Act came into force the interest of the insolvent in the Fund had become vested in the Official Assignee: Held, that, by s. 4 of the Provident Funds Act, all the right and title of the Official Assignee was determined as from the coming into operation of the Act, and that its operation was not limited to cases where the vesting order had been made after its commencement. The distinction between the construction of enactments affecting vested rights and those which merely affect procedure recognized. Javanmal Jitmal v. Muktabai, I. L. R. 14 Bom. 516, referred to. Under s. 7 of the Insolvent Debtor's Act, the right of the insolvent to be paid the sum standing to his credit in the fund, on his retirement from service, vested in the Official Assignee. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF MADRAS v. Art. 65 of the Articles of Association of the Company provided that "no person shall be appointed or have authority to act as a proxy, who is not a shareholder in the Company." At meetings in May and June, 1902, the right of proxy was exercised by a person, who had become a shareholder in the Company in March, 1889, and was manager of the firm of Wallace & Co., and holding its procuration from 1st April, 1889, but who was neither a member of the firm nor a shareholder in the Company, when the power-of-attorney was executed. Held, by the Judicial Committee (reversing the decision of the High Court), that on the true construction of Art. 65 the proxy was not necessarily required to be a shareholder, when the power of attorney was signed: the article was complied with by his being so qualified at the time when he was called upon to act as a proxy. Held, also, that, although the proxy was not expressly named in the power-of-attorney, he was sufficiently described in it for all business purposes, and the articles of association required nothing more. BOMBAY-BURMA TRADING CORPORATION v. The words "in respect of sales in execution of decrees" in s. 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 do not include any proceedings instituted after the sale for setting it aside. Ss. 311 and 312 therefore of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to sales under a certificate. The infringement of the provisions of s. 290 of the Civil Procedure Code is not a mere irregularity, but vitiates the sale. Bakshi Nand Kishore v. Malak Chand, I. L. R. 7 All. 289. The only remedy of a judgment-debtor where property has been sold in execution of a certificate issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880, and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, is by way of an appeal under s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868. The effect of s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 is that Act XI of 1859 and Bengal Act VII of 1868 and Bengal Act VII of 1880 are to be considered as if the provisions contained in them were contained in one Act so far as such construction is consistent with the tenor of the last-mentioned

The respondent, on 2nd January 1894, after the expiry of the sixty days allowed for that purpose, appealed to the Commissioner to cancel the sale as irregular, fraudulent and collusive. The Commissioner ordered an enquiry whether the respondent had been prevented by fraud from taking any steps in the matter, and against that order the appellant appealed to the Board of Revenue, who on 9th May 1895, acting under the powers of revision given them by Act VII of 1880, set aside the certificate under which the sale was held: and on 4th February 1896 the Commissioner passed a formal order annulling the sale on the ground of fraud, but without hearing the purchaser. In a suit in the Civil Court to set aside the sale brought by the respondent pending the above proceedings, which suit was decided on the footing of the orders made by the Revenue authorities, which were put in as evidence in the suit: Held (upholding the decisions of the Courts below), (a) that under ss. 17 and 24 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, the revenue authorities had ample jurisdiction to make the orders on which decrees of the Civil Court were based, the former section applying to orders made after as well as to those made before sale in execution of certificates issued under the Act; (b) that as the Commissioner was acting in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction under s. 17 of the Act the appeal to him was not barred by the provisions as to limitation in ss. 12 and 16; (c) that the proper remedy of the appellant, if aggrieved by the order setting aside the sale, was to apply to the Revenue authorities for a re-hearing and that it was now too late to ask for a remand on that ground. GANESWAR SINGH v. Before therefore a service under Bengal Act VII of 1880 can be effected by posting it on the residence of the party on whom it is wished to serve it, it must be shown that some attempt has been made to effect personal service, and that such personal service, for reasons stated, could not be made. In such a case, when the fact of service of notice is denied, the onus is on the party alleging service to prove it. RAKHAI CHANDRA RAI CHOWDHURI v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA . . . I. L. 2. — and s. 12—Suit to set aside certificate and sale—Limitation. A certificate was issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), and notice under s. 10 of the Act was served on the 12th December 1895. The debtor objected under s. 12 on the ground that no arrears were due, but the objection was overruled, on his failure to produce evidence, on the 7th August 1895, and the sale took place on the 10th August 1895. In a suit brought on the 8th August 1896 to set aside the certificate and the sale:—Held, that the terms of s. 8, cl. (b), providing the limitation of one year from the date of service of notice are peremptory, and in no way controlled by the provisions of s. 12, and the suit in respect of the certificate was therefore barred by limitation. Held, also, that, if the certificate cannot be cancelled, the sale held in execution of it also cannot be cancelled. *RAJBUNS SAHAI v. ss. 8, 10, 12—Ben. Act I of 1895, s. 15—Sale, setting aside—Notice under s. 10, non-service, effect of—Limitation. When the notice under s. 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 is not served, the certificate does not acquire the force of a decree, and is not binding upon the judgment-debtor, and the sale held in execution of such a certificate is necessarily bad in law, and may be set aside by a suit if brought within the statutory period allowed by the Limitation Act. S. 15 of Ben. Act I of 1895 refers to a suit to have a certificate cancelled or modified, and it has no application to a suit to have a sale held in execution of such a certificate set aside. If a person is entitled, under Ben. Act VII of 1880, to bring his suit within one year, or if otherwise the suit is within time, the mere facts of his presenting an appeal to the Commissioner, and the Commissioner having rejected his appeal under Ben. Act I of 1895, would not deprive him of the full period of limitation which, having regard to the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880, under which the sale was held, is entitled to. *GOPAL DAS v. 2. — Bengal Act VII of 1868, ss. 2 and 8—Notice—Sale for arrears of—Certificate of sale. A sale for arrears of public demands recoverable under Bengal Act VII of 1880 cannot be supported unless the certificate, upon which execution is taken out, is in strict compliance with the Act. The notice under s. 10 of the said Act must be issued by the Collector in whose office the certificate is required to be filed. Even supposing that s. 8 of Act VII of 1868, read with s. 2 of the said Act, makes a certificate of sale conclusive evidence that all notices have been duly served and posted in the case of a sale under Bengal Act VII of 1880 as well, the question when the notice was served would still remain open. The certificate of sale, moreover, cannot be conclusive evidence that the certificate in execution of which the property was sold was a certificate duly issued in accordance with the law. *UZIRALI MOLLAH v. 3. — s. 10 and s. 23—Attachment under certificate procedure. The certificate and notice referred to in s. 10, Bengal Act VII 1880, are executive acts, and an attachment, which is the result of those acts, is not a judicial, but an executive proceeding. The meaning of s. 23 of that Act, which lays down that a Collector “in the discharge of his functions shall be deemed to be a person acting judicially within the meaning of Act XVIII of 1850,” is that, for the purpose of protecting him from personal liability, his action is to be regarded as judicial. *RAM NARAIN KOER v. The effect of s. 19 of that Act is, that it relates to the practice and procedure in respect of sales, that is, to the practice and procedure of executing Courts in the carrying out of sales. ss. 21 and 22—Sale in execution of a certificate under the Act—Procedure—Satisfied certificate—Act XI of 1859. The Collector, having received a report from the Tehsildar that arrears of road cess (Bengal Act IX of 1880) were due in respect of villages, took proceedings purporting to be in pursuance of Bengal Act VII of 1880. In the certificate of unpaid demand, the names of the persons described as debtors were those not of the present proprietors, but of former proprietors, and the copy and notice were addressed to them. Held, by the High Court, that the procedure laid down by Bengal Act VII of 1880 must be strictly followed; and it is therefore absolutely incumbent on the Courts, when considering the validity of sales under that Act, to rigidly require an exact compliance with the formalities prescribed therein by the Legislature. Where a certificate is issued in respect of a demand under the Act, upon payment of such demand, it becomes the duty of the Collector, under s. 22, to enter satisfaction upon the certificate, and also in the register kept under s. 21. A sale in execution of a satisfied certificate, or of a certificate not duly made under the Act, is absolutely void. Abdul Hye v. Nawab Raj, B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 911; and Lala Mobaruk Lal v. I. L. R. 17 Calc. 414

Held, on appeal, by the Privy Council, affirming the decision of the High Court, that even if the certificate and the proceedings following it had been duly authenticated, and intimated to the present proprietor, which had not been the case, they could not affect his right of property in the villages, inasmuch as the Act only authorized the attachment and sale of the property of the persons who are described as debtors. This of itself was a ground for cancelling the sale. Their Lordships also concurred in the view taken by the High Court that there was no evidence showing that the certificate had been duly signed, and were of opinion that the High Court had rightly found payment of the arrears before the sale. notice was issued under s. 10 of the Act, whether maintainable—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244, applicability of. A suit to set aside a sale held for arrears of cesses, on the ground that no notice of the certificate, under s. 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act (Ben. II, Art. 12 (b).* Where it is alleged that notice has not been served under s. 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, the onus is on the party alleging want of notice. Rakhal Chandra Rai Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State, I. L. R. 12 Calc. 603, referred to. It is not sufficient that such notice should be actually served; it must be served in accordance with the provisions of s. 31 of the Act. "Adult" in that section does not mean a person who has attained majority within the meaning of the Majority Act, but a person of such an age as to be capable and responsible for the due communication of the notice to the member of the family for whom it is intended. A duly made certificate has on its filing the force and effect of a decree. Until, however, service of notice under s. 10, which has the effect of an attachment, no particular property is bound by the decree. A sale without prior attachment is irregular, but not a nullity. Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Mujaffar Hossein, I. L. R. 18 Calc. 188, referred to. The due making and filing of the certificate gives it the effect of a decree, and therefore non-service of notice under s. 10 does not affect the validity of the certificate itself. A suit to set aside a sale on the sole ground that the decree under which it was held was an invalid decree simply because of absence of notice under s. 10, fails because such absence of notice does not affect the validity of the decree. Bajinath Sahai v. Nel, 2 C. & P. 485, approved of. To allow a large stack of bones to remain uncovered in the open for a long time so as to become rotten and to emit a smell noxious to people living in or passing by the vicinity is not an act which a bone-mill manager is entitled to do in carrying on his trade in a reasonable way and by allowing such act to be done he would be guilty of committing a public nuisance. *BERCKEFELD v. 2. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 424—Talukhdari settlement officer managing estate under Act XXI of 1881—Broach and Kaira Encumbered Estates Act. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to succeed, on his father's death, to a talukhdari estate to the exclusion of defendant 1, who, he alleged, was a supposititious child set up by his stepmother to defeat the plaintiff's right of inheritance. It appeared that defendant 1 had obtained a decree against the plaintiff's father establishing his legitimacy and declaring him entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate in question. In accordance with that decree, the talukhdari settlement officer (defendant 2), who was manager of the estates under the Broach and Kaira Encumbered Estates Act (XXI of 1881), paid defendant 1 an allowance of R200 a month on account of his maintenance, which allowance, the plaintiff alleged, was illegal and wrongful. The defendants contended that the suit was bad, because notice had not been given to the talukhdari settlement officer as required by s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held, following Shahebzadee v. Ferguson, I. L. R. 7 Calc. 499, and Bhanu Balapa v. Nana, I. L. R. 3 Bom. 343, that although the talukhdari settlement officer, acting as manager under XXI of 1881 was a "public officer," yet the suit was maintainable without giving the talukhdari settlement officer the notice required by s. 424 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it was not a suit arising out of acts done by him in his official capacity. *SARDARSINGJI v. cipality of land forming old road—N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act (XV of 1873), s. 38—Power of municipality over public highway. There is a presumption that a highway, or waste land adjoining thereto, belongs to the owners of the soil of the adjoining land. S. 38 of Act XV of 1873 (N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act) was not intended to deprive persons of any private right of property they have in the land used as a public highway, or to confer such rights on the municipality, or has the section any such effect. In a case where such land ceased to be used as a public highway, and was granted by the municipality to third persons, who proceeded to build thereon—Held, that the owners had a good cause of action against such persons for the demolition of the buildings and restoration of the property to its original condition. *NIHAL CHAND v. It does not own the soil from the centre of the earth usque ad calum, but it has the exclusive right to manage and control the surface of the soil, and so much of the soil below and of the space above the surface as is necessary to enable it adequately to maintain the street as a street. Every member of the public, and every sect, has a right to use the streets in a lawful manner, and it lies on those who would restrain him in its exercise to show some law, or custom having the force of law, depriving him of the privilege. *SADAGOPACHARIAR v. 4. ——— Izaphatdar—Penal Code, s. 21—Lessee of village undertaking to keep forest account—Officer. The word "officer" in s. 21, cl. 9, of the Penal Code means a person employed to exercise to some extent a delegated function of Government; he must be either himself armed with some authority or representative character or his duties must be immediately auxiliary to those of some one who is so armed. Hence an izaphatdar—i.e., a lessee of a village who has undertaken to keep an account of its forest revenues and pay a certain proportion to the Government keeping the remainder for himself—is not an officer, and therefore not a public servant, within the meaning of s. 21. *REG. v. B, a poddar in the bank, demanded and took a reward for his trouble in receiving the money. On B being prosecuted and charged under s. 161 of the Penal Code:—Held, that, although the money might have been paid on account of Government, it was on behalf of the bank, and not on behalf of the Government; that the money was received by the accused; and that the poddar was a servant of the bank only, and not a public servant within the meaning of cl. 9, s. 21, of the Penal Code. In the matter of the petition of MODUN MOHUN

20. ———— Party called upon to attend and witness a search—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 287—Rendering assistance to a public servant—Refusal to sign search list, by person who attended search under Abkari law—Liability—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 103 (1). A person was called upon by an Abkari Inspector to attend a search held under s. 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and did so. He, however, refused to sign the search list when it was prepared. On a charge being preferred against him, under s. 187 of the Indian Penal Code, of intentionally omitting to assist a public servant in the execution of his duty:—Held, that the accused was not guilty of an offence under s. 187. Assuming that a person called upon to attend and witness a search under s. 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is under a legal obligation to attend the search and sign the search list, the “assistance” which a person is bound, by the earlier part of s. 187 of the Penal Code, to render is ejusdem generis with the various forms of assistance referred to in the latter part of the section. It must have some direct personal relation to the execution of the duty by the public officer. The signing of the search list required by s. 103 is an independent duty which is imposed on the witnesses, whereas, the word “assistance,” as used in the section, implies that the party who assists in doing something which, in ordinary circumstances, the party assisted could do for himself. In the matter of RAMAYA NAIKA (1903)

(9), of the Penal Code, is one who is appointed to some office for the performance of some public duty. Held, that a peon in the service and pay of the Government, and attached to the office of a Superintendent of the Salt Department, is a public servant. Held, further, that a Manager of an estate under the Court of Wards is not a public servant. *Reg. v. Act VII of 1876), s. 56. Held, that a Receiver appointed under s. 56 of the Land Registration Act is not a public servant within the terms of ss. 174, 175, 186 and 188 of the Penal Code. Held, further, that such a Receiver was not a public servant legally competent to issue an order directing persons to attend before the Collector with their collection papers and rent receipts, and that disobedience to such an order did not constitute an offence under either s. 174 or s. 175 of the Penal Code. Held, also, that an order by such a Receiver, forbidding persons to pay rent to any person other than the Receiver, was not an order promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, and that disobedience to such order was not an offence within the terms of s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held, further, that persuasion addressed to tenants, in the absence of such Receiver, not to pay rent to him, was not an obstruction of the Receiver within the provisions of s. 186 of the Penal Code. *EBRAHIM SIRCAR v. On a complaint being preferred under s. 353 of using criminal force to deter a public servant in the execution of his duty:—Held, that the offence had not been committed. The constable was not engaged in the execution of his duty as a public servant and was technically guilty of house trespass, and his action was calculated to cause annoyance to the inmates of the house, and was insulting to the accused, who was justified in causing the slight harm, which he had inflicted on the constable. The latter could not be regarded, under s. 99, as acting in good faith under colour of his office, as his action was not authorized by any police circular or order. *DORASAMY PILLAI v. The exercise of such right must not interfere with the ordinary use of such streets by the public and must be subject to such directions as the Magistrate may lawfully give to prevent obstructions of thoroughfare or breaches of public peace. *Sadagopachariar v. RAILWAY COMPANY—contd.

1. ——— Liability for nuisance caused by works—Statutory powers—Beng. Reg. I of 1824—Act XLII of 1850—Land taken for public purposes—Suit for injunction to restrain nuisance.

The plaintiffs, the owners and occupiers of a house and premises in Howrah, sued for an injunction to restrain a nuisance caused by certain workshops, forges, and furnaces erected by the defendants, and for damages for the injury done thereby. The defendants were a railway company incorporated under an Act of Parliament for the purpose of making and maintaining railways in India, and by an agreement (entered into under their Act of Incorporation) between them and the East India Company, they were authorized and directed to make and maintain such railway stations, offices, machinery, and other works (connected with making, maintaining, and working the railways) as the East India Company might deem necessary or expedient. The workshops complained of were erected in 1867 under the sanction of the Bengal Government on land purchased by the Government in 1854 for the purposes of the railway under Regulation I of 1824 and Act XLII of 1850, and which had been made over to the defendants. Held, that a nuisance having been proved to exist—that is to say, such annoyance as materially interfered with the ordinary comfort of human existence in the house and caused sensible injury to the property of the plaintiffs,—the defendants could not plead laches or acquiescence on the plaintiffs' part, as, upon the plaintiffs complaining in May 1870, the defendants had admitted that there was a nuisance, and had up to June 1871 made various efforts to abate it. Nor could the defendants escape liability on the ground that the nuisance had been caused by them in the reasonable exercise of powers conferred upon them by the Legislature. An injunction was granted restraining the defendants, and liberty to apply was reserved in the decree. On a motion by the defendants, supported by an affidavit showing the alterations which they proposed to make with the view of abating the nuisance, and alleging that a period of three months was required to carry out these alterations, and that a refusal to grant this time would necessitate the closing of the company's workshops, and would occasion great inconvenience, the Court granted the time asked for, on the conditions that the defendants paid the costs of the application, and did all they possibly could in the meanwhile to prevent annoyance to the plaintiffs. RAJ MOHUN BOSE v. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY . . . . . 10 B. L. R. 241

2. ——— Fire caused by spark from engine—Action for damages—Negligence—Statutory powers. The East Indian Railway Company was incorporated under 12 & 13 Vict., c. XCIII, "for the purpose of making and constructing, working, and maintaining" the East Indian Railway, including all necessary, accessory, or convenient extensions, branches, etc., as might be agreed upon between the Railway Company and the East India Company; and by agreement between the Railway Company and the East India Company, dated 17th August 1849, the Railway Company was "authorized and directed to make and maintain such stations, offices, machinery, and other works and conveniences connected with the making, maintaining, and working the Railway," and "to provide a good and sufficient working stock of engines, carriages, and other plant and machinery for working the said railway." The plaintiff was the owner of a piece of land adjoining the railway line at Kharmatta, a station on the Chord Line of the Company's railway, on which land was erected a bungalow, with stables and out-houses adjoining. In the action brought by the plaintiff against the Railway Company to recover compensation for damages occasioned by a fire caused by a spark from one of the engines of the Company, the plaintiff alleged want of due care on the part of the defendants in the management of the line by allowing dry grass of too great a length to remain on the railway banks, and in driving their engines along the line without due precautions being taken to prevent the expulsion of sparks. Held, that the defendant Company was authorized to run locomotive engines on the lines of railway constructed by the Company under the statutory powers given to it, and therefore the Company was not liable for damage caused in working the line under such a statutory powers, without proof of negligence. Held, also, on the evidence, that neither in the construction of their engines nor in the condition of the railway banks was any negligence shown on the part of the Company. HALFORD v. 4. ———— Railway Act, 1854, s. 10—Declaration of nature of goods—Silver—Loss by criminal act of company's servants. S. 10 of the Railway Act, which provides that no railway company shall in any case be answerable for loss or injury in respect of gold, silver, and other excepted articles delivered for carriage, unless the conditions of that section are fulfilled, applies where the loss has been caused by the criminal acts of the company's servants. Semble: If, after declaration made by the sender of an excepted article entitling the railway company to receive an increased charge, the goods are carried at the ordinary rates the sender would be entitled to recover in case of loss. The conditions of s. 10 are not fulfilled by the sender merely giving an account of the quantity and description of the goods delivered for carriage when required to do so by the booking clerk. To establish the liability of the railway company in the case of excepted articles, the declaration required by s. 10 must be made in such a manner as to intimate that the sender invites the company to undertake the special risk and is willing to pay the special rates. VENKATACHALA v. 8. ———— Carriers—Insufficiency of evidence. The consignees of two bundles of cow-hides which had been carried by a railway company having refused to take delivery on the ground of shortness in the number of pieces, the railway company pleaded that they were not indebted, as he had contracted to carry such and such a number of bundles and had done so. The bills of lading showed so many bundles said to contain such a number of pieces. The company also contested the plaintiff's enumeration of pieces. Held, that the railway company was not liable, there being no evidence that the bundles had been broken or the hides counted by pieces. SCHLAEPFER, PUTZ & Co. v. 9. ———— Carriers—Evidence—Burden of proof of negligence—Misdescription of goods—Carriers Act (III of 1865), s. 9—Act XVIII of 1854, s. 11. The plaintiff caused to be delivered to the defendants, for carriage from Bombay to Oojein, certain goods, among which were twelve bags of sugar-candy. His agent, when signing the consignment note at the railway station, erroneously, but without fraudulent intent, stated the contents of the twelve bags to be alum, for which a lower freight was charged by the defendants. The railway clerk received the goods and gave a receipt note, on which the following condition was printed: "The company give notice that they are not responsible for loss or damage arising from fire, the act of God, or civil commotion." In the course of the journey a fire broke out in the train, and a large portion of the plaintiff's goods including ten bags of the sugar-candy was destroyed. In an action for damages for non-delivery:—Held, (i) that under the provisions of s. 9 of the Carriers Act (III of 1865), the burden of proving negligence on the part of the defendants did not rest upon the plaintiff, notwithstanding the condition in the receipt note; (ii) that the misdescription by the plaintiff's agent, of the twelve bags of sugar-candy as alum did not exonerate the defendants from all liability to the plaintiff in respect of these bags. The plaintiff, however, was only entitled to recover, in respect of the ten lost bags, the value of alum only, and not sugar-candy; while the defendants, on the other hand, could not, in respect of the said ten bags, charge freight as for sugar-candy. *ISHVARDAS GULASCHAND v. 10. — Act XVIII of 1854, ss. 11 and 43—Carriers. The defendants, having made arrangements with the Madras Railway Company for the through carriage of goods, received from the plaintiff's agent at Poona thirty bags of jowari to be conveyed thence to Bellary and delivered to the plaintiff's agent there. The "goods consignment note," which was signed by the plaintiff's agent at Poona, contained the following condition, of which he had due notice: "The Company receive goods for conveyance to stations on other railways with which they have made arrangements to book through, subject to the rules and regulations and rates and fares of the respective companies over whose lines the goods may pass." On reaching Raichore, the bags of jowari were transferred from the defendants' wagon in which they had left Poona into wagon of the Madras Railway Company. One bag was subsequently lost; but the remaining twenty-nine arrived and were unloaded in good condition at Bellary on the 19th September, 1877. No steps were taken, either by the defendants or by the Madras Railway Company, to give information of the arrival of the bags to the consignee, and he never received them. The plaintiff sued to recover their value. The defendants pleaded (i) that, under a rule of the Madras Railway in force at the time of the making of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, delivery was complete the instant the bags were unloaded at Bellary; and (ii) that the plaintiff's agent at Bellary did not apply for the goods, but allowed them to remain in the station-yard until they became rotten by rain and were destroyed by order of the Collector some time in November. The Madras Railway Company had issued a public notice of the above rule in the following terms: "The Madras Railway Company hereby give public notice that they will not be responsible for loss of, or damage to, grain after it has been unloaded from the Company's wagons." The defendants sought to incorporate this notice into their contract with the plaintiff by virtue of the condition printed in their "goods consignment note." Held, that the said public notice afforded no protection to the defendants, on the ground that it was invalid as a regulation for non-compliance with the provisions of s. 43 of Act XVIII of 1854, inasmuch as it had not been sanctioned by the Local Government, and had not been posted up at all the stations of the Madras line of railway; and that it could not otherwise be binding against the plaintiff, as neither the plaintiff nor his agent were shown to have had any knowledge of it at the time of entering into the contract with the defendants. Quære: Whether, if the plaintiff or his agent had such knowledge at the time of making the consignment, the notice would have constituted such a stipulation as to contravene s. 11 of Act XVIII of 1854 or whether it might be read together with that section, and treated as effectual, except so far as its operation would be limited in its scope by that section. Held, also, that the arrival of the grain at the station of destination (Bellary) having been proved, the burden of showing that the goods were ready for delivery to the plaintiff for a reasonable time after such arrival lay on the defendants, although no proof had been given of any application for delivery by the plaintiff within a reasonable time. It is the duty of a railway company to keep goods which have reached the station of their destination ready there for delivery until the consignee, in the exercise of due diligence, can call for and remove them, and it is the duty of the consignee to call for and remove them within a reasonable time. Semble: The object of s. 11 of Act XVIII of 1854 is to preclude railway companies from being able by any stipulation to escape from liability for loss or injury to goods caused by the gross negligence or misconduct of their agents or servants. SURUTRAM BHAYA v. G. I. P. RAILWAY COMPANY

11. — Carriers, liability of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 151, 152—Act XVIII of 1854—Act III of 1865. The English common law rule, under which common carriers are held liable as insurance of goods against all risks except the act of God or the King's enemies is not now in force in India. In cases not met by the special provisions of the Act relating to railways and carriers, the liability of carriers for loss or damage to goods entrusted to them is prescribed by ss. 151 and 152 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). The plaintiff's goods were being carried in a train of the defendants from Nandgaon to Egatpuri. During the journey the train was plundered by robbers, and the plaintiff's goods were stolen. Held, that the defendants were entitled to the benefit of s. 152 of the Contract Act, and should be permitted to give evidence that the robbers of the plaintiff's goods were not the servants or agents of the defendants, and that the defendants (by their servants and agents) took as much care of their goods as a man

(2) and (3)—Carriers Act, 1865.* The plaintiff sued the defendants (a railway company) for damage for short delivery of goods consigned to him. The defendants pleaded a special contract signed by the consignor, which, in consideration of their carrying the goods at a special reduced rate instead of the ordinary tariff rate, exempted them from liability for loss or damage to the goods from any cause whatever before, during, and after transit over their railway or other railways working in connection therewith. Held, that under the contract the defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. TIPPANNA v. 13. ————— Railway Act (IV of 1879), s. 11—Loss of goods—Carrier—Bailment—Declaration of nature and value of goods and payment of increased charge, Effect of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 151. In respect of goods for which, under s. 11 of the Indian Railway Act (IV of 1879), a railway company is under no liability unless "an increased charge" is paid, the payment of an increased charge puts them under the same liability as they are under with respect to goods not specially provided for by that section, viz., the liability of ordinary bailees. The payment of "an increased charge" is not equivalent to insurance. In January 1890 a box containing rupees was delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant Company in Bombay to be carried to Saugor. From the evidence it appeared that the plaintiffs did not intend to insure the box. The box was taken to the booking office at the station, and the parcel clerk asked what it contained, and was told that it contained coin, and he learned casually that the amount was Rs. 6,000. The clerk charged Rs. 18-1-0 for the box, which was the "treasure rate" for carriage. This sum was paid, and the box was duly despatched, but was lost or stolen in the course of transit. The plaintiffs sued to recover the Rs. 6,000. The defendants contended that, having regard to the provisions of s. 11 of Act IV of 1879, they were not liable, inasmuch as (1) the contents of box had been duly disclosed, nor (2) had an increased charge been paid. The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the lower Court. On appeal: Held (reversing the decree), that the defendant company was not liable (i) because there was no sufficient declaration of the value and contents of the box; (ii) because the sum paid by the plaintiffs for the carriage of the box was the ordinary charge for treasure, and was not the increased charge which under s. 11 of Act VI of 1879 should have been paid in order to make the company liable. GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY CO. v. In a suit for damages occasioned by such a loss, the plaintiff need not prove how the loss occurred, but, on proof of the loss, the company will, in absence of proof of any ground upon which it can be exonerated, be liable as a bailee. SESHAM PATER v. 16. ————— "Terminal charges"—Right of G. I. P. Railway Company to levy terminal charges—Stat. 12 & 13 Vict., c. 83 (Local and Pers.)—Railway Act (IX of 1890), ss. 41, 45, 46—Carriers. By the Act of Incorporation of the defendant Company it was enacted that it should be lawful for the Railway Company and the East India Company to enter into such contracts, etc., as they thought fit (inter alia) for performing all matters and things necessary or convenient for carrying into effect the making, maintaining, and working the railway . . . including any provision as to the tolls, receipts, and profits thereof." Subsequently the defendant Company and the East India Company entered into an agreement with each other, under which the defendant Company were empowered to make certain charges called "terminal charges"—charges which are levied on account of the carrying of goods to and from the wagon, loading and unloading them on and from the wagon, and for the use of the Company's premises till the goods are removed. The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs. 1,34,152-11, which during the three years prior to suit the plaintiffs had been obliged by the defendants to pay as "terminal charges" on consignments of cotton made by the plaintiffs from up-country stations to Bombay. The plaintiffs objected to these charges as not within the scope of the powers conferred by the Act of Incorporation of the defendant Company, and contended (i) that such charges were illegal; (ii) that if not illegal, they were excessive. Held, by FARRAN, J., dismissing the suit, that the defendants were entitled to charge "terminal charges" on the goods carried by them for the plaintiffs, subject only, as to the rates and amounts thereof, to the sanction of Government; and that the rates charged to the plaintiffs were not higher than the sanctioned charges. "Terminal charge" means a charge for the use of goods station and for the various duties which a Railway Company, as common carriers, perform in connection with the goods consigned to them for carriage. Semle: Under ss. 41, 45, and 46 of Act IX of 1890, the High Court has no jurisdiction to consider or entertain a claim relating to terminals charged by the defendants subsequently to the time at which that Act came into operation. Held, on appeal (SARGENT, C.J., and BAYLEY, J.), that the charges were within the authority given by that Act. Such charges, if not strictly "tolls," were certainly charges for performing services, if not, "necessary," at any rate "convenient for the working of the railway," and payment for such services might also properly be regarded as a source of "profit" to the Railway Company, within the meaning of that Act. The only "terminal charge" sanctioned by Government was a charge sanctioned in 1865, and then expressly defined as "including collection and delivery." The defendant Company had since that date given up "collecting and delivering," but there had been no new scale of terminal charges submitted for sanction, or sanctioned. It was consequently contended by the plaintiffs that the "terminal charge" now levied had never been sanctioned. Held, also, that a review of the proceedings leading to the sanction of 1865 showed that Government had contemplated the possible abandonment by the Company of "collection and delivery" when it sanctioned the rate then fixed; and that consequently it must be presumed that Government had left it to the defendant Company to make such deductions, in case of abandonment of this portion of their services, as they should think proper, which they had done. 17. ——— Remoteness of damage—Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Condition under which goods despatched by Railway—Absence of proof of deterioration—Contract Act, s. 73. The plaintiff, who was a tailor, delivered a sewing machine and some cloths to the Madras Railway Company (the defendant) to be sent to a place where he expected to carry on his business with special profit by reason of a forthcoming festival. Through the fault of the Company's servants, the goods were delayed in transmission, and were not delivered until some days after the conclusion of the festival. The plaintiff had given no notice to the Company that the goods were required to be delivered within a fixed time for any special purpose, and he had signed a forwarding note under a statement that he agreed to be bound by the conditions at the back, and one of those conditions was to the effect that the Company is not liable "for any loss of or damage to any goods whatever by reason of accidental or unavoidable delays in transit or otherwise." The plaintiff now sued to recover from the Company a sum on account of his estimated profits and the travelling expenses of himself and his assistant at the place of delivery and their expenses for food and lodging while there. Held, (i) that, as the plaintiff had not shown that the goods had undergone deterioration in value or otherwise, the condition above cited was not void under Railways Act, 1890, s. 72, although it had not been approved by the Governor General in Council; (ii) that the plaintiff was bound by the condition even if he was in fact ignorant of its effect; (iii) that the damages claimed were too remote. 18. ——— Explosion in carriage—Duty to carry passengers safely—Negligence—Onus of proof—Ignorance or knowledge of law as a defence, Its limitation—Damages, measure of—Costs. Held, by the Appellate Court (affirming the decision of the Court below), that in providing for the safety of their passengers it is the duty of a Railway Company to exercise such a degree of care, at the very least, as may reasonably be required from them under all the circumstances of the case, and where an accident happens, they must show that it was not preventable by any care or skill. If a railway carriage be rendered dangerous to the passengers travelling therein by reason of the fact that there are fireworks in it, and if the carrying of the fireworks could have been prevented by the exercise of due care on the part of the Railway Company, they are liable for damages for negligence should an explosion of the fireworks occur. Where loss of life and a damage have resulted from the explosion of fireworks in a passenger carriage, the onus is on the Railway Company to show that they took due care to prevent the conveyance of fireworks in that manner, and not on the plaintiff to show that they did not. *Scott v. The maxim that every man is presumed to know the law is limited to the determination of the civil or criminal liability of the person whose knowledge is in question. 19. — Negligence of Railway Company in leaving door of railway carriage open or unfastened—Hurt caused to passenger while trying to secure door. Leaving the door of a railway carriage open or unfastened amounts to negligence on the part of a Railway Company, and the Company is liable for any injury caused thereby to a passenger. If any inconvenience or danger is caused by the negligence of the Company, a passenger may lawfully attempt to get rid of such inconvenience or danger, provided that in doing so he runs no obvious risk disproportionate to the inconvenience or danger; and is not himself guilty of any negligence; and, if in such attempt he is injured, the Company is liable in damages. The door of a railway carriage attached to a train running from Poona to Bombay was left open or unfastened when the train left the Khandala station. The plaintiff was then asleep in the carriage. He subsequently awoke when the train was passing through a tunnel and found that the whole of the door, which opened outwards, had been torn away from its hinges, except the upper part or sunshade, which was flapping backwards and forwards against the side of the tunnel and the door post of the carriage. In attempting to secure it, the top of the plaintiff's finger was torn away and the bone of one of his fingers fractured. Held, that the injuries were caused by the negligence of the Railway Company, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. *BROMLEY v. carrying passengers does not extend so far that the Company can be held responsible, under all circumstances, for not carrying them safely. Negligence alleged against them must be proved affirmatively, where denied. It was not the duty of the railway servants to search every parcel that passed the ticket barrier, carried by a passenger. Words in the judgment of the Chief Justice, Q. B., in Collett v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 16 Q. B. 984, as to the duty to "carry safely," explained. As no act, or omission, of neglect had been proved against the Company or their servants, the decrees below were recommended for reversal, and the suit for dismissal. *EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. 22. — Responsibility of Railway Company for goods left on its premises without a receipt being obtained for them—Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 47 (b)—Rules framed by the Company under the Act. Held, that a rule by which a Railway Company disclaimed all responsibility for goods left on the Company's premises unless certain conditions were fulfilled, the principle of which was that the goods should have been accepted and a receipt given for them by a duly authorized employé of the Company, was a rule properly made under the provisions of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, and that no suit in respect of the loss of goods merely deposited upon the Company's premises without such a receipt being taken for them, could be maintained. *Shea v. 23. — Re-booking of goods after arrival at original destination—Carriage of goods—Contract—Formation of contract—Rules of Company for consignment of goods—Instructions to Station-master to re-book. The rules of a Railway Company prescribed certain procedure for the booking of goods. In accordance with those rules, certain goods were booked from Trichinopoly to Bagalkot. The plaintiff requested A, the goods clerk and Station-master at Hotgi (on defendants' railway), to have the goods re-booked from Bagalkot to Hotgi, and for this purpose handed him the railway receipt, with a written application, which, however, was not in the form of consignment used by the Company. A accordingly sent a service telegram to the Station-master at Bagalkot, asking him to re-book the goods. The Station-master there did not re-book the goods, and they were delivered at Bagalkot. The plaintiff sued the Railway Company for damages for non-delivery at Hotgi. Held, that the defendant Company had not contracted with the plaintiff to carry the goods from Bagalkot to Hotgi. The mere fact that the plaintiff got A, the Station-master at Hotgi, to send a service telegram to Bagalkot did not constitute a contract to bind the Company. *MALKARJUN SHIDAPA v. 24. ————— Negligence in construction of railway—Suit for damage to land by causing water to flood it—Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 7, 312—Acting in excess of statutory powers in construction of railway—Suit for damages. The defendants, by the negligent construction of a railway made in exercise of their powers under the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), caused the plaintiff's land to be flooded in the rainy season, and consequently damaged. That Act provides that a suit shall not lie to recover compensation for damage caused by the exercise of the powers thereby conferred, but that the amount of such compensation shall be determined in accordance with the Land Acquisition Act, 1870. Held, it being shown that the defendants had exceeded or abused their statutory powers, that the plaintiff's remedy was by suit for damages, and not for compensation under the Act. Statutory powers under such an Act are to be exercised with ordinary care and skill, and with some regard to the property and rights of others: they are granted on the condition sometimes expressed and sometimes understood—expressed in the Railways Act of 1890, but if not expressed always understood—that the undertakers "shall do as little damage as possible in the exercise of their statutory powers." The injunction should be in general terms, restraining the defendants from flooding, and should not direct the execution of specified works. Lawrence v. Great Northern Railway Company, 16 Q. Whilst the consignment was en route to Kamptee, G directed the railway servants at Sakrigali Ghat station to notify to the Station-master at Kamptee to deliver the consignment to plaintiff at Nargaon. This direction was given; but, disregarding the order, the Station-master at Kamptee delivered the consignment to R at Kamptee. The plaintiff sued the East Indian Railway to recover compensation for loss of goods. Held, that the Railway Company was liable in damages; the case was a simple case of breach of contract; the defendant contracted to carry the goods and deliver them at Nargaon to the plaintiff, and failed to do so. Held, further, that the liability of the Railway Company was not affected by the fact that the Station-master at Kamptee acted wrongly in disregarding the instructions which he had received from Sakrigali Ghat station. Held, further, that a plea of failure to give notice under s. 77 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, urged for the first time in second appeal, and not supported by any evidence that such notice was not given, was taken too late. This could not be regarded as a stale demand, as the suit was filed within two months after the cause of action arose. CHHAGANLAL SHALIGRAM SHET v. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY (1903)

One of the rules under which reserved accommodation is granted is 'Reserved carriages in mail trains can be provided when the load of the train permits.' In granting reserve accommodation on the terms embodied in the rules, the Company does not contract itself out of the benefit conferred by s. 67, and is not liable in damages for refusing to attach a reserved carriage to a mail train already fully loaded. KOMIREDDY SURAYANARAYANAMURTY v. On arrival at Agra the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company's Station Master demanded payment of higher rates, calculated per maund, and refused delivery until such rates were paid. The consignees paid under protest and sued both Railway Companies for a refund of the excess charges. Held, that the contract for carriage of the goods for the whole distance was one entire contract with the receiving company, who were liable for the overcharge, if any, wrongfully demanded from the consignees. Muschamp v. s. 2—Act XVIII of 1854, s. 17—Refusal to produce ticket—Fraudulent intention—Trespass—Passenger by rail. The plaintiff entered a carriage on the defendants' railway at Surat with the purpose of proceeding to Bombay. By an oversight, and without any fraudulent intent, he omitted to procure a ticket at Surat. On arriving at Nowsari, he applied to the station master for a ticket to Bombay, but was refused ; he was, however, allowed by the defendants' servants to proceed in the same train to Bulsar, where he again applied for a ticket, and was again refused, but was directed by the defendants' servants to get into the train and not leave it again. At Dhandu he again got out and applied for a ticket to the station master. During a discussion between the plaintiff's master and the station master, the plaintiff, at the direction of his master, re-entered the train. Ultimately the station master refused to give the plaintiff a ticket, and ordered him to get out of the train ; and, on his not complying with this order, sent a sepoy, who forcibly removed the plaintiff from the carriage. the forcible and illegal removal of the plaintiff from the carriage, and for the illegal detention of the plaintiff at the station at Dhandu, and for the illegal refusal of the defendants to allow the plaintiff to proceed in the train to Bombay:—Held, (i) that the latter portion of s. 2 of Act XXV of 1871, amending s. 1 of Act XVIII of 1854, which provides for payments to be made by persons failing to produce their tickets when demanded by the servants of the company, applies only to the case of a person who has received a ticket and will not or cannot produce it, and not to a person travelling without having obtained a ticket with no intention to defraud; (ii), that the absence of a fraudulent intention did not make the entry into the carriage less unlawful, and consequently that the plaintiff started from Surat as a trespasser; (iii) that the conduct of the railway officials at the stations intermediate between Surat and Dhandu, if it amounted at all to leave and license to the plaintiff to proceed without a ticket, could only operate as such until the train stopped at the next station; (iv), that there was no legal obligation on the station master to issue a ticket to the plaintiff to enable him to proceed from Dhandu. *PRATAB DAJI v. There was no evidence that the safety of any persons in any train had been endangered by his neglect of duty. The order, under s. 31, in case of his refusal to pay it, should be one merely for recovery of the amount due as the fare and not an order to pay such or any other sum as if it were a fine. A passenger who has such a ticket which is still in force and in his possession cannot be said to be travelling without a ticket within the meaning of s. 31, merely because he does not happen to have the ticket with him, and therefore cannot produce it when called upon to do so. *In the matter of the petition of BUSKIN. (ii) Under s. 75 of that Act, it is necessary that both the value and contents of a parcel (if over Rs. 100 in value) should be declared before the Railway Administration can be held liable in respect thereof. The parcel contained goods which, according to s. 75 and Sch. II of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890) were liable to be insured as well as those not so liable. The parcel was lost in transit on the Southern Maratha Railway Line. The plaintiff thereupon sued the Railway Company to recover damages for the loss of the goods which were not liable to be insured. The defendant Company denied liability. Held, that the Railway Company was not liable. The words of s. 75 of the Railways Act (IX of 1890) draw a distinction between articles mentioned in Sch. But under s. 77 of the Act it is a condition precedent to the bringing of such a suit that notice of the plaintiff's claim must be given within six months from the date of the delivery of the goods for carriage to the railway administration, which the plaintiff seeks to render liable. way Company and the East Indian Railway Company for damages for non-delivery of goods alleged to have been delivered at Ghaziabad for conveyance to Bombay on the 16th May, 1898. From Ghaziabad to Delhi the railway line belongs to the East Indian Railway Company, and from Delhi to Bombay the line is that of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company. Both Companies were, therefore, made defendants in the suit. On the merits, the suit was dismissed as against the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company, but a decree was passed against the East Indian Railway Company for Rs. 4,617. It appeared that no notice of plaintiff's claim under s. 140 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890) had ever been directly addressed to the East Indian Railway Company. The plaintiff relied on a notice dated the 28th July, 1898, which he had addressed to the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company, making a claim against that Company. The latter Company had at once informed the East Indian Railway Company of the plaintiff's claim, and had given notice that, in case the plaintiff sued them, they would expect the East Indian Railway Company to bear all the expenses. Further correspondence took place between the two Companies with reference to the plaintiff's claim, and, on the 31st October, 1898, the Solicitors of the East Indian Railway Company wrote to the plaintiff's Solicitors as follows: "DEAR SIR,—Your letter of the 21st instant, to the address of the General Traffic Manager, Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway, Bombay, has been handed to us by our clients, the East Indian Railway, Calcutta, claiming on behalf of your clients a sum of Rs. 7,437, being the amount of loss alleged to have been sustained in respect of short delivery of 500 and 125 bags of wheat. The file of papers has just been handed to us, and we will write to you further as soon as we have had an opportunity of going through same. Yours faithfully, (Signed) MORGAN & Co." The lower Court held that in this letter the Solicitors of the East Indian Railway Company treated the communication sent to them by the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company as a communication affecting themselves, and that they could not afterwards say that the notice of claim given by the plaintiffs to the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company and forwarded to them (East Indian Railway Company) was no notice to them: that the plaintiffs must be held to have given the notice through the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company; and that such notice was good. On appeal: Held (reversing the decree, and dismissing the suit), that no sufficient notice had been given to the East Indian Railway Company under ss. 77 and 140 of Act IX of 1890. *EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. to be served—Service on Traffic Manager. The notice of claim under s. 77, Railways Act, must be served under s. 140 of the Act on the Agent of the Company. But the law does not require that the notice should be physically thrust in the Agent's hand. It is sufficient if it appears from the findings that the Agent has had full knowledge and notice of the claim. 7. ———— ss. 77, 140—Refund of an overcharge—Notice—Letter—Manner of service—Statement of fact not a proof of fact. Plaintiffs, who were merchants residing at Poona, entered into an agreement with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company that the latter should deliver consignments of goods despatched from Wadi at Poona at a certain rate. Several consignments were accordingly delivered by the Railway Company at Poona and they were paid for according to the agreed rate. At the time of the delivery of the last consignment, the Railway Company refused to deliver it unless all the consignments, including those already delivered and paid for, were paid for at a higher rate. The plaintiffs thereupon paid the higher rate under protest and sued the Railway Company in the Court of Small Causes at Poona for the recovery of the overcharges claimed and received by the defendant. The defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as no notice of the claim was served by the plaintiffs according to s. 77 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890). The Judge overruled the defendant's contention and allowed the claim holding that a notice under s. 77 of the Act was not necessary because the section contemplated overcharges recovered before the delivery of the goods to the consignee, and not to overcharges recovered after the delivery as was the present case. He further held that if notice was necessary, it was given by the plaintiff inasmuch as there was an allegation that a notice had been sent in a letter addressed to the Agent of the Company, care of the Station Master, Poona, by the plaintiffs. The defendant having applied under revisional jurisdiction: Held, that notice was necessary. The overcharge referred to in the section is not confined in its meaning to an overcharge recovered before the delivery of the goods to the consignee at their destination. Held, further, that the delivery of a letter under s. 140 of the Act must be in exact compliance with the terms of the section and it must be delivered to the Agent at his office. The statement of a fact in a letter is no proof of the fact itself. GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY v. DEWASI (1907)

Endangering safety of persons—Death by rash or negligent act—Contributory negligence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 304A. The Bengal-Nagpur Railway is worked on the "line clear and caution message" system, no train being allowed to leave a station without a "line clear" certificate in a prescribed form to the effect that the line is clear up to the next station. The petitioner, the assistant station master of Gomharria Station, who was on duty and busy issuing tickets to passengers, wrote out in the prescribed form book the following conditional line clear message, although he had received no message from Sini Station: "On arrival of 15 down passenger at Gomharria, line will be cleared for No. 80 up goods train from Gomharria to Sini." All the particulars required by the rule were not filled in, no number was entered on it, nor was the time of arrival of the train filled in. The form-book was left in the station-master's room. The guard of No. 80 up goods train, which was waiting at Gohmarria, entered the station-master's room in his absence, took the imperfect certificate out of the book, and without reading it appended his signature, passed it on to the driver and gave the signal for the train to start,—all without the knowledge of the petitioner. The result was a collision between the 15 down passenger train and the 80 up goods train, causing the death of several persons. The petitioner was convicted under s. 304A of the Penal Code and s. 101 of the Indian Railways Act of 1890 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment:—Held, that the act of the petitioner did not in itself endanger the safety of other persons, and that the effect was too remote to be attributable to such a cause. *Sant Dass v. Merely travelling without a ticket is not an offence under the section. Bentham v. Hoyle, L. R. 3 Q. B. D. 289; Queen-Empress v. Rampal, I. L. R. 20 All. 95, referred to. Travelling with a false and entirely irrelevant ticket with fraudulent or dishonest intention is an offence under s. 112 (a) of the Railways Act. There cannot be cumulative sentences though a conviction might take place on an alternative charge or even both charges.  Decree in the alternative, legality of.* Land forming the bed of a tidal and navigable river is the absolute property of Government. Where Government has for a long time been collecting revenue and special cesses from the occupant thereof, it will be presumed that such land was granted on raiyatwari tenure and the occupier will be entitled to hold the land so long as he pays the revenue ; and he can be ousted only under the provisions of Madras Act II of 1864. Where the assignees from the Secretary of State join him as a co-plaintiff with themselves in a suit, the period of limitation will not be 60 years under Art. 149, Sch. II of the Limitation Act ; such article applying only to suits brought on behalf of the Secretary of State. The only parties entitled to a decree in such a suit will be the assignees and a decree in the alternative cannot be passed in favour of the Secretary of State or the assignees, when the right of the assignees is ad-

1. Appointment—Civil Procedure

Code, 1882, s. 503—Discretion. The appointment of receiver is a matter resting in the discretion of the Court. The powers of appointing a receiver conferred by s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be exercised with a sound discretion, upon a view of the whole circumstances of the case, not merely the circumstances which might make the appointment expedient for the protection of the property, but all the circumstances connected with the right which is asserted and has to be established. The Court will not interfere by appointing a receiver where a right is asserted to property in the possession of a defendant claiming to hold it under a legal title, unless a strong case is made out. Owen v. Homan, 4 H. L. C. 997, 1032, and Clayton v. Attorney-General, 1 Cooper's Cases 97, referred to. SIDHESWARI DABI v. ABHOYESWARI DABI

2. Temporary injunction—Civil Procedure

Code, 1882, ss. 492 and 503. The distinction between a case in which a temporary injunction may be granted and a case in which a receiver may be appointed is that, while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation in the former case it would be sufficient if it be shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged ; while in the latter case a good prima facie title has to be made out. Sidheswari Dabi v. Abhoyeswari Dabi, I. L. R. 15 Calc. 818, approved. 6 W. R. Mis. 1

9. ————— Grounds for appointment—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 503—Waste by Hindu widow. The powers conferred by s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code are not to be exercised as a matter of course, and it is not a reason for allowing an application for the appointment of a receiver that it can do no harm to appoint one. The discretion given by that section is one that should be used with the greatest care and

caution. Because a plaintiff in his plaint makes violent and wholesale charges of waste and malversation against a defendant in possession of property as executor under a will or as the tenant for life, and upon this basis applies for a receiver to be appointed, it is not a necessary consequence that such appointment should be made. Held, in this case where the sons of a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate under a will sued their mother, as reversioners under the will, for possession of the estate, on the ground of mismanagement and waste, and on the same grounds applied for the appointment of a receiver under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code, that a receiver had been appointed on insufficient grounds. *PROSONOMOYEE DEBI v. 10. ————— Power of Subordinate Judge—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 503, 505. A Subordinate Judge, if he has good grounds, may decline to appoint a receiver even after he has received the necessary authority from the District Judge under s. 505 to do so. *GOSSAIN DULMIR PURI v. 11. ————— Receiver in suit for arrears of rent and ejectment—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 23, 52—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 503, 505. Although, having regard to the provisions of ss. 23 and 52 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code would not apply to a suit brought under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 merely for arrears of rent, there is no provision in that Act which excludes the operation of s. 503 when suit is brought for recovery of the tenure itself. When therefore a suit was brought under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 for arrears of rent and for ejectment of the defendant:—Held, that a receiver of the rents and profits of the tenure might properly be appointed under the provisions of s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code. KARTIC NATH PANDY v. PADMANUND SINGH

I. L. R. 11 Calc. 496

12. ————— Ground for appointment of receiver—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 503.—Discretion of Court—Waste. The removal of a large amount of property by the defendant, and under circumstances which might fairly give rise to suspicion during the pendency of the suit in which the question of title to that property would be determined, is a sufficiently strong ground for the appointment of a receiver. Sidheswari Dabi v. Abhoyeswari Dabi, I. L. R. 15 Calc. 818; Chandidat Jha v. Padmanand Singh, I. L. R. 22 Calc. 459; and Sham Chand Giri v. Bhairam Pundey, Suit No. 179 of 1893, referred to. *SIA RAM DAS v. 13. ————— Joint estate—Mortgage—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 503. In a suit for partition of a joint estate the words "property the subject of a suit" in s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code mean the whole joint estate. In such a case "the owner" in s. 503 (d) means the whole body of owners to whom the joint estate belongs. The Court has jurisdiction to place the whole of a joint estate out of which a plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned in the hands of a receiver, and to order that a receiver so appointed shall be at liberty to raise money on the security of the whole of such joint estate. PORESH NATH MOOKERJEE v. OMERTO NATH MITTER . I. L. R. 17 Calc. 614

RECEIVER—contd.

14. ————— Receiver of mortgaged property appointed at instance of mortgagee—Receiver appointed by Appeal Court—Practice. In a suit by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale in default of payment of his mortgage-debt the Court of first instance, when passing a decree for the plaintiff, refused, on the plaintiff's application, to appoint a receiver of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property. The plaintiff appealed against the latter part of the decree, and after filing a memorandum of appeal obtained a rule for the appointment of a receiver until the hearing of the appeal. The Court of appeal, after argument, made the rule absolute, and appointed a receiver until the hearing of the appeal, and subsequently, when the appeal came on for hearing, varied the decree of the Court below by appointing a receiver of the mortgaged property. The High Court possesses the same powers with regard to the appointment of a receiver as are possessed and exercised by the Courts in England under the Judicature Act. JAIKISSONDAS GANGADAS v. ZENABAI I. L. R. 14 Bom. 431

15. ————— Receiver in insolvency proceedings under Civil Procedure Code—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 356—Commission of receiver how computed. A receiver appointed in insolvency proceedings under the Civil Procedure Code is entitled to a lien for the amount of his commission on the net assets remaining after payment of the charges specified in Civil Procedure Code, s. 356 (b), (c), and (d). MAHADEVA v. KUPPUSAMI I. L. R. 15 Mad. 233

16. ————— Jurisdiction of District Judge to appoint receiver—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 503 and 505. A District Judge has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of properties which are the subject of a suit or attachment in other Courts, even though such Courts may have been subordinate to his Court. (Ss. 503 and 505 of the Civil Procedure Code reviewed). In a suit upon a mortgage, the mortgaged property was directed to be sold, and the time of grace had expired. An application was then made by the Judgment-debtor to the Court of execution for the appointment of a receiver under s. 503, both as regards the mortgaged property as well as other properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. Held, that the Court had no power to appoint a receiver of properties other than the subject-matter of the suit, and as regards the mortgaged property a receiver could be appointed on the mere ground that the property would not fetch so much by

18. ————— Nomination by—Subordinate Courts with grounds of nomination—Sanction of the District Judge—Order passed by the District Judge—Power to review—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 505. The District Judge made an ex parte order for the appointment of a receiver under s. 505 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Subsequently, it having been shown to the Judge that the nomination made by the Subordinate Judge on which the order was passed was incorrect, the District Judge made an order admitting a review. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Without deciding whether an appeal would lie against the order of the District Judge, the High Court dismissed the appeal, holding that the order of the District Judge having in the first instance been ex parte, he had clearly the power to review it. The words of s. 505 give the District Judge full discretion to pass such order as the circumstances of the case in all their bearing require: the "nomination" in that section is equivalent to the conditional appointment of a receiver which the District Judge can accept or reject, or modify. CHUNILAL HAJARIMAL v. 19. ————— Subordinate Judge, power of, to appoint—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 503 and 505. A Subordinate Judge, when considering the expediency of the appointment of a receiver, is acting under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) as explained by s. 505. When he does appoint, his order is passed under s. 503, and when he refuses to take the necessary step preliminary to appointment, his order is also made under that section. An appeal lies from such an order made by a Subordinate Judge. Circumstances under which a receiver is appointed considered. John v. John, [1898] 2 Ch. 573, referred to. SANGAPPA v. 21. ————— Duration of receivership—Discretion of Court—Practice—Variance between judgment and decree—Civil Procedure Code, s. 206. It is within the discretion of a Court appointing a receiver in a suit to order that the office should continue permanently after the decree when such continuance is necessary, or for so long as it may be so. A decree of the High Court declared it to be necessary that a permanent appointment should be made of a receiver and manager of the estate allotted by the Government to the family of the deceased Maharajah of Tanjore, and directed that fresh appointments to the receivership should be made from time to time as occasion might require during the life of the senior widow, under whose management the estate had been originally placed, and the lives of the co-widows surviving her, or for so long as the Court might consider necessary. Held, that the decree directing the permanent receivership was not in variation of the judgment which it purported to follow; that the Court had a discretion to make such an order when necessary for the preservation of the estate; and that so doing was in accordance with the practice, there being nothing to prevent the Court from giving the management to the senior widow living at the time, if she should be fit to manage the estate on behalf of all interested in it. *MATHUSRI UMAMBA BOYI SAIBA v. 22. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 503—Appointment of receiver after decree. In a suit brought in 1880 by the widow of a deceased partner to wind up a partnership, the surviving partner was prohibited by the Court, at the instance of the plaintiff, from collecting debts due to the firm; but leave was given to apply for the recovery of debts which might become barred by limitation. After decree, on the application of the plaintiff, a receiver was appointed under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure to collect outstanding debts for the purpose of executing the decree. The receiver having sued in 1883 to recover a debt which was due to the firm in 1879, the suit was dismissed, on the ground, among others, that the appointment of a receiver after decree was ultra vires. Held, that the appointment of the receiver was valid. *SHUNMUGAM v. 25. ————— Position and functions of—Parties—Suit for specific performance. The receiver in a suit is nothing more than the hand of the Court for the purpose of holding the property of the litigants whenever it is necessary that it should be kept in the grasp of the Court in order to preserve the subject-matter of the suit pendente lite; and the possession of the receiver is simply the possession of the Court. He has no personal rights in the property, nor can he take any steps with regard to it without the sanction of the Court. If it is necessary for him to take action of any sort, he should be put in motion by the Court on the application of the parties to the suit; and whatever he rightly does with regard to the property, he does simply as the agent of the owners of the property. Where the receiver in a suit had, by order of Court, sold certain property in the suit, and had executed the contract of sale in his own name, a plaintiff praying for specific performance against the purchaser for refusing to complete the contract was admitted with the receiver as co-plaintiff, he having obtained leave to sue. *WILKINSON v. 26. ————— Right of suit as receiver and right to possession of property—Rule of Supreme Court. In a suit by K against B and others, the Supreme Court ordered that the estate of R (deceased) should be applied to the payment of his debts, legacies, etc., and appointed a receiver of the rents and profits of his real property. It also ordered the defendants and persons claiming through them to give up to the receiver such of the real property as might be in their possession. Subsequently, in the same suit, the High Court declared that K was entitled to a moiety of the estate of R after payment of costs and legacies, and directed the estate to be sold and the proceeds brought into Court. Afterwards the receiver brought a suit in his own name against R and one S, alleging that, though the property had been decreed to K and himself jointly, yet K had, by collusion, obtained sole possession of it, and that, in execution of a money-decree against her, it had been sold to S. Held, that, as Receiver of the High Court, plaintiff had no title as of right against S to the immediate possession of the property, and no right to sue in another Court in his own person to receive possession thereof. The rule on the Original Side of the Court, taken from the practice of the English Court of Chancery, is not to compel a party to a suit to give up to the receiver possession of property unless an order of Court to that effect has previously been made upon him; the proper course being by proceedings in Court to fix an occupation rent, and to order the party in possession to pay the same. *RAM LOCHUN SIRCAR v. This suit was brought to recover the sum so expended. It was objected that the receiver could not maintain the suit on the ground that the sum sued for was neither the subject of a suit against the zamindar nor property attached in execution of a decree against him. Held, that the receiver could maintain the suit. *SUNDARAM v. D, without special leave of the Court, served a notice to quit on certain tenants of the estate who claimed to hold a permanent lease, and afterwards instituted a suit to eject them, also without special leave of the Court. Held, that the order appointing him did not give him power to serve such notice or to institute such suit without

In 1881 the zamindari having been attached by a creditor, the zamindar granted a new lease in perpetuity in lieu of the former lease, reserving a rent of R12,000 a year. A receiver of the zamindari, having subsequently been appointed with full powers under the provisions of s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, sued the lessee to recover rent at the rate reserved in the first lease from 1881. Held, that the receiver was entitled to recover the rent claimed. The provisions of s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure were intended to declare that the receiver, in respect of all property which was or could be attached, had the powers of the owner as they existed at the time the property was brought under the orders of the Court by attachment, provided that they have not ceased by operation of law. *GOPALASAMI v. A sale of property under an order of Court by a person appointed receiver in a suit is not a sale by the Court. The fact that such person is the Court receiver does not place him in a different position. 41. ——— Money in hands of Receiver—Estate administered by Court—Pressing claims against estate, or part owners thereof—Power to order Receiver to pay—High Court, power of. Plaintiff was admittedly entitled to a half share of an estate, which this suit was brought to divide. A decree had been made referring it to the Commissioner to ascertain and divide the said estate and a Receiver had been appointed. No power had been especially reserved by the decree to the Receiver to pay pressing or other debts due by the estate, or the part owners thereof. Some time would elapse before the accounts could be taken in the Commissioner's office, and meanwhile two creditors were threatening attachment of the property of the estate, and their debts were running at considerable interest. The estate was not otherwise indebted. There was money in the Receiver's hands to the credit of the estate, half of which would be more than sufficient to pay off the claims of these creditors. The plaintiff applied to the Court for an order to the Receiver to pay these two debts out of the plaintiff's half share of the moneys in his hands, leaving the plaintiff to prove his right to debit the estate with such payments. Held, that the Court had power to make the order asked for, though such an order would only be made in special cases and on special conditions. Held, further, that the present was a case in which the order asked for might properly be made. *MOTIVAHU v. accounts is as to the items of the particular account, and it involves the inquiry whether all his collections, made on behalf of the property of which he is the Receiver, are duly entered in the accounts and, next, whether all his disbursements are payments properly made in respect of that property. A Receiver's liability is not restricted to matters shown upon his accounts. If there is any liability attaching to the Receiver, other than that which appears on the face of the accounts, the proper course is to sue the Receiver for the purpose of establishing that liability. Questions with regard to the soundness or prudence of the system of management adopted by a Receiver, or charges of wilful default or neglect, are not matters that can be disposed of in the shape of exceptions to accounts. Even where a prima facie case of the responsibility of the Receiver for malpractices of his servants is made out, an inquiry into such practices is foreign to an application to pass Receiver's accounts. The objection that a Receiver has not included in his accounts collections made in the mofussil, cannot be dealt with upon an application to pass his accounts. If a prima facie ground is made out of the accountability of the Receiver for the mofussil collections, the proper course is either to postpone the passing of the accounts until the question of the Receiver's liability is established by suit, or to pass the accounts, reserving the right of the parties to establish any claim they may make against the Receiver in a suit properly framed for the purpose. *SATTYA SANKAR GHOSAL v. It was admitted that S. was installed as mohunt as alleged. lease pendente lite—Rights of mortgagee. Somjee, a Khoja merchant, died in 1885, leaving as his survivors four sons by his first wife (who predeceased him), his second wife Labai, and four sons by Labai. By his will, Somjee gave the whole of his moveable and immoveable property to his sons by his first wife, directing them out of such property to give to Labai and his sons Rs. 30,000 within six years of his death. On the 12th January, 1899, Somjee's sons by his first wife mortgaged certain of the properties to the Bank of Bombay. In 1903, the Bank having advertised such properties for sale under a power reserved to them by the mortgage deed, Somjee's sons by Labai (who had since died) brought a suit No. 554 of 1903 against Somjee's sons by his first wife and the Bank of Bombay, claiming that the properties could only be sold subject to the charge in their favour. On the 14th January, 1904, the Bank assigned the mortgage to Dwarkadas. On the 26th January 1904, Mr. Macleod was appointed a Receiver by the Court. On the 24th February, 1904, the Receiver was authorised to file an ejectment suit, where necessary. On the 18th March, 1904, the Receiver as plaintiff No. 1 and Dwarkadas as plaintiff No. 2 filed the present suit to eject Kissan, the first defendant, from a portion of the property mortgaged to the Bank. Kissan claimed to be in possession under a lease from Goolam, the second defendant, one of the four sons of Somjee by his first wife. After the commencement of the suit, suit No. 554 of 1903 was disposed of in favour of the Bank of Bombay and the Receiver was discharged. The first defendant contended that Dwarkadas had no right to join the Receiver in bringing the suit, that the moment the Receiver was discharged his power to sue and with it the suit itself came to an end. Held, that the Bank or its assignee Dwarkadas had a right to come in under s. 372 of the Code of Civil Procedure and apply that the suit be continued by one or the other of them. No such application was in fact made, because Dwarkadas was already on the record as plaintiff No. 2. The joinder of Dwarkadas as a co-plaintiff with the Receiver, though it was not perhaps, strictly speaking, legal at the time, did not constitute a misjoinder. Held, also, that a theatre, erected by the mortgagors on the land, after the execution of the mortgage, was, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, included in the mortgage. The Transfer of Property Act makes no distinction between freehold and leasehold for the purposes of the rule of law embodied in ss. 8 and 70 of the Act. In this respect the Act reproduces the English law, which is, that all things which are annexed to the property mortgaged are part of the mortgage security and therefore the deed need contain no mention of structures or fixtures, unless a contrary intention can be collected from the deed. Held, also, that if a mortgagor left in possession grants a lease without the concurrence of the mortgagee, the lessee has a precarious title, inasmuch as, although the lease is good as between himself and the mortgagor, who granted it, the paramount title of the

1. WHAT CONSTITUTES PARTNERSHIP.

1. ——— Participation in profits—Application of English law. M M & Co., merchants in London, carrying on business with W N & Co., merchants in Calcutta, sought to make the defendant liable as a partner in the latter firm, under a particular memorandum of agreement between the members of the firm of W N W & Co., and the defendant. Held, that such agreement did not constitute the Rajah a partner in or with the said firm. Participation in profits does not constitute a partnership. The question is, not whether the person sought to be made liable participated in the profits, but whether the trade has been carried on by persons acting on his behalf. There is no rule of law which imposes partnership liability upon a man who advances to others money for the purpose of carrying on their business, and in return secures to himself a share of the profits which may arise from the employment in the business of the money so advanced by him. PRATAB CHUNDRA SINGH v. MOLLOW, MARCH & Co.

S.C. COURT OF WARDS v. MOLLOW, MARCH &amp; Co. . . . . 12 W. R. 56

On appeal to the Privy Council:—Held, that although a right to participate in the profits of trade is a strong test of partnership, and there may be cases where, from such participation alone, it may, as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be inferred, yet whether that relation does or does not exist must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. To constitute a partnership, the parties must have agreed to carry on business and to share profits in some way in common; but where a contract is entered into between partners and a third person for the protection of that person as a creditor, whereby it is agreed that he shall receive in consideration of advances commission on the net profits of the partnership business, and large powers of control over the business are given to him, but no power to direct transactions, the Court, if satisfied that the contract was one of loan and security, will not interpret it as constituting a partnership. In applying the English law of partnership to cases in India, the usages of trade and habits of business of the people of India, so far as they may be peculiar and differ from those in England ought to be borne in mind. Money paid as rent to one party. The parties had entered into a contract of partnership to work certain supposed mines; plaintiff to receive a bonus and also six monthly payments as "rent" for the land, both parties to share the profits and bear the losses; it being stipulated that in case coal should not be discovered, the bonus and any sum paid as rent would be refunded. Held, that this was a partnership arrangement, and the payment of the money which went by the name of rent was not as by a tenant to a landlord, but as consideration-money for land forming a portion of the capital. There is no analogy in respect of the manager being liable to account between a joint Hindu family and a partnership. Where it was arranged amongst the members of a joint Hindu family that the accounts of a banking business carried on by them should be kept, on the understanding that the profits, when realized, should be divided amongst the individual members in certain proportions, and that the expenses of each member should be credited and charged in the name of each member:—Held, that this was in the nature of a partnership, and an account was decreed. RANGANMANI DAS v. 6. ——— Ancestral business—Account. An ancestral trade may descend like other inheritable property upon the members of a Hindu undivided family. The partnership so created or surviving has many, but not all, of the elements existing in an ordinary partnership. For example, the death of one of the partners does not dissolve the partnership; nor, as a rule, can one of the partners, when severing his connection with the business, ask for an account of past profits and losses. SAMALBHAI NATHUBHAI v. 8. ——— Continuing firm—Partnership for a fixed term—Death of partner—Power of partner to nominate a successor—General device not an exercise of power—Effect of default in exercising power of nomination—Good will—Valuable asset. V, J, and S, being large shareholders in the Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Mills, Limited, entered into an agreement in October 1873 to cause the said company to be wound up and to form a new company to take over its assets and liabilities, and to cause themselves to be appointed agents of the new company under the firm of V J S & Co., and under that name to act as agents of the new company, subject to the terms of the agreement. The agreement provided that the firm of V J S & Co., should take the agency of the new company for a period of thirty years; that of the profits to be derived by the said firm out of the agency V should receive 39 cents, J 31 cents, and S 30 cents; that in case of a vacancy in the firm of V J S & Co., caused by the death or retirement of any of the partners, the nominee of the dying or retiring partner should be admitted into partnership, and should receive the share of such partner, and should exercise all his authority. In pursuance of this agreement, the Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Mills, Limited, was wound up, and a new company called "The New Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited," was formed and registered. Both the memorandum and articles of association of the said new company contained clauses providing that the firm of V J S & Co., or whatever member or members that firm for the time consist of, should be agents of the company so long as the said firm should carry on business in Bombay, or until they should resign. The firm of V J S & Co., having been constituted under the said agreement, became the agents of the said company, and continued to act as such down to the date of the present suit. No other business was done by the firm, and the three partners divided the profits realized by the firm out of the agency business in the shares specified in the agreement as above mentioned. V died in 1874, leaving a will whereby, in exercise of the right vested in him by the agreement, he nominated and appointed his wife K as his successor in the firm, and she accordingly became and was recognized as a partner therein. In August 1875 she assigned her interest in the firm to H, and he thereupon became a partner and received 39 cents of the profits. In November 1876 J assigned his interest in the firm (31 cents), to H and S, of which 21 cents became the property of H and 10 cents the property of S,—the firm henceforth consisting only of these two partners, of whom the former received in all 60 cents of the profits and the latter 40 cents. In November 1882, H died, leaving a will whereby he appointed his wife B his executrix, and left all his property to her for life, and after her death to his son. The will did not refer to the firm, or nominate any successor in the partnership. In the present suit B as executrix claimed to be entitled to 60 cents or shares in the firm of V J S & Co. up to the date of the testator's death, and to a like share in the profits earned subsequently to his death, or to be earned by the firm so long as it continued to carry on the said agency business of the company. The defendant admitted the right of the plaintiff to the share claimed in the profits earned prior to the testator's death, but resisted her claim to any portion of the subsequent profit. Held (i), on the authority of Beamish v. Beamish, Ir. Rep. 4 Eq. 120, that the testator's will did not operate as an exercise of the power of nominating a successor in the firm so as to make the plaintiff a partner. (ii) That having regard to the nature of the duties of the firm as agents and to the language of the agreement constituting the firm, coupled with the fact that there was no capital employed in the business, it must have been intended that, in default of nomination of a successor by a retiring or deceased partner, the agency should be carried on by the continuing or surviving partners in the name of the firm, and that the interest of the testator in the firm upon his death therefore survived to the defendant. Held also, that, although the plaintiff was entitled to an account up to the date of the testator's death, she was not entitled to a share of the good-will as an asset of the firm. The good-will of a firm is attached to the name, and in the present case, by the partnership agreement itself, the name was to be used by the surviving partners or partner for the own benefit. That arrangement took away a value from the good-will, if indeed it was consist-with its being an asset at all. BACHUBAI v. SHAMJI JADOWJI. I. L. R. 9 Bom. 536

9. ——— Intention of parties—Profits, participation in—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 242, 238—Broker. A right to participate in profits is sometimes a strong test of partnership; but whether or not the relation of partners does or does not exist depends on the real intention and agreement of the parties, and not upon the mere fact of participation in profits. Davis v. Davis, [1894] 1 Ch. 393, referred to. The facts that B, an assistant in a firm of brokers, received, over and above his salary, a share in the profits; and that, with the knowledge of the partners, he occasionally signed, on delivery orders which came from buyers in favour of the firm, the signature "for Carritt & Co." (the name of the firm), with his own initials or name underneath; that he occasionally signed with his own signature letters dealing with mere matters of detail; and that he purported to make firm offers to buyers and sellers, and initialled alterations in some contracts, do not constitute him a partner in that firm. The duties and responsibilities of a broker discussed. MORRISON v. VERSCHOYLE (1901). 6 C. W. N. 429

10. ——— Partnership, tests of—Participation in profits by lender—Taking active interest in business—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 240, 241—Holding out as partner to strangers—Estoppel—Intention—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115. The right to participate in the profits of trade is in itself a strong test of partnership, but participation in profits, although strong evidence, is not conclusive evidence of a partnership and the question of partnership must be decided by the intention of parties to be ascertained from the contents of the written instruments, if any, and the conduct of the parties. It being established in this case with regard to a person's relation towards a business carried on with his money, that he was a mere lender:—Held, that neither the fact of his participating in the profits nor that he took an active interest in the business were inconsistent with his position as a lender. Mollow, March & Co. v. Court of Wards, 10 B. L. R. 312, and Badeley v. Consolidated Bank, L. R. 38 Ch. D. 208, followed. Where the question was as to whether a person, though not in fact a partner, did by his acts and conduct hold himself out to strangers as such, so as to become liable by estoppel:—Held, that to establish such liability it was not essential to show that he acted fraudulently or negligently. Even want of knowledge on his part of the effect of his acts and conduct would not absolve him from liability, if his acts and conduct were such as would induce a reasonable man to believe that he was a partner and to act upon such belief. Sarat Chandra Dey, v. Gopal Chandra Laha, L. R. 19 I. A. 203, Cornish v. Abington, 4 H. & N. 549, Carr v. London and North-Western Railway Company, L. R. 10 C. P.

2. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PART-NERS.

1. ——— Construction of deed of partnership—Agreement to give managing partner commission—Dissolution of partnership—Loss of commission on dissolution. By an agreement, made on the 10th of January 1857, between K N and several other persons, it was agreed that they should form a co-partnership for the purpose of erecting a mill for the manufacture of yarn. The capital of the partnership was fixed at Rs. 3,00,000, divided into 100 shares of Rs. 3,000 each. By the 4th clause of the agreement it was provided that, in return for the trouble K N had been at in establishing the factory, "whatever cotton had to be purchased for the factory K N was to purchase, and whatever yarn should be made in the factory K N was to sell, and for whatever he should sell on account of the factory he was duly to receive from the co-partnership his commission at the rate of 5 per cent. during his lifetime," and it was also provided that, though the purchases and sales by the co-partnership should not be made through K N, "yet upon the whole amount of the sales the co-partnership was duly to pay 5 per cent. to K N during his lifetime." The factory was built, and its machinery procured and set up by K N, and both financially and otherwise the factory was wholly managed by him. Shortly after it commenced to work, it was found that the co-partnership had expended all its capital and was heavily involved in debt—incurred by K N without the sanction of his co-partners,—and that the factory was working at a loss; and at the suit of some of them, but against the consent of K N and a minority of the co-partners, the co-partnership was ordered to be dissolved. K N then claimed to be entitled to compensation for the loss of the commission he should have earned upon the sale of the yarn of the factory during his lifetime. Held, that he was not so entitled; that as between his co-partners and K N there was no obligation on the former to subscribe more capital after the original capital of the co-partnership had been exhausted; and that there was no implied covenant on the part of co-partnership to continue to work the factory in order that K N should be in a position to earn his commission during his lifetime. Distinction between right to compensation for loss of fixed wages and right to compensation for loss of commission pointed out. When a partnership is wound up by the Court, all questions arising between the partners out of the partnership transactions should be disposed of in the winding-up suit. *LALBHAI VALLABHBHAI v. 7. ——— Order for recognizance on conviction of criminal trespass—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 489—Sentence. On a conviction of criminal trespass under s. 447, Penal Code, the Joint Magistrate added to the sentence of imprisonment an order that the prisoners should give recognizances to keep the peace. The Sessions Judge recommended that the order as to recognizances should be quashed, as criminal trespass was not one of the offences detailed in s. 489 for which such recognizances could be taken. The High Court declined to act on this recommendation, holding that there was nothing illegal in the Joint Magistrate's order, the conduct of the accused clearly pointing to an intention to commit a breach of the peace. *QUEEN v. In order to bring his acts within the terms of the latter section, there must either be an express finding to the effect that his acts involved a breach of the peace or an evident intention of committing the same, or the evidence must be so clear as to satisfy the Court (without an express finding) that such was the case. *JIB LAL GIR v. There may be findings in the case which justify such an order if such findings can be brought within the terms of s. 106. Jib Lal Gir v. Jogmohan Gir, I. L. R. 26 Calc. 576, referred to. Where the accused were convicted under s. 143 of the Penal Code and ordered under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to furnish security to keep the peace, and it was alleged that the facts as proved showed that the accused came in a body, some of whom were armed with lathis and some of whom used threats and did other acts showing an evident intention to commit breaches of the peace:—Held, that there should have been an express finding to that effect; that if the accused or any of them acted in such a manner, they should have been convicted of criminal intimidation or other offence which would enable the Magistrate to bind them over to keep the peace; and that the order under s. 106 should be set aside. *SHEO BHAJAN SINGH v. persons resided that they were likely to commit a breach of the peace at a religious procession which was about to take place, and the holding of which was opposed to their religious tenets. After an inquiry, as against all the accused jointly, the Magistrate on the evidence of the tehsildar and a sub-inspector of police ordered that ten of the accused, who were said to be the "ringleaders," should enter into bonds with sureties and the rest should enter into their own recognizances to keep the peace for one year. Held, that the Magistrate's order purporting to be prepared under s. 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code, did not adequately or properly disclose the substance of the report or information upon which he issued his summons: the parties were entitled to something more than a mere assertion by the Magistrate that he had been informed that a breach of the peace was likely to occur, in order to enable them, if they were in a position to do so, to bring evidence to rebut the truth of such information; that the very loose statements of the tehsildar and the sub-inspector, as to the large majority of the persons summoned, were quite insufficient to justify the wholesale order for security passed by the Magistrate; that as the religious procession would have been over in a fortnight, it was a most excessive exercise of power to require all the parties to give security for one year; and that the Magistrate should have dealt with the cases of the ten alleged "ringleaders" first, and should have required the tehsildar and sub-inspector to give much fuller statements seriatim, and particularly as to each individual man; and as to the remaining fifty-nine, there should have been some clear and distinct proof affecting each of them and warranting the inference that such person was likely to commit a breach of the peace or to do a wrongful act likely to occasion a breach of the peace. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. F. B. 46, and Queen v. Nirunjun Singh, 3 N. W. 431, referred to. In proceedings instituted under s. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code against more persons than one, it is essential for the prosecution to establish what each individual implicated has done to furnish a basis for the apprehension that he will commit a breach of the peace.

RECOGNIZANCE TO KEEP PEACE—
contd.*8. LIKELIHOOD OF BREACH OF PEACE AND EVIDENCE—contd.

In holding such an inquiry it is improper to treat what is evidence against one of such persons as evidence against all, without discriminating between the cases of the various persons implicated. Queen-Empress v. Nathu, I. L. R. 6 All. 214, referred to. Although in an inquiry under s. 117 the nature or quantum of evidence need not be so conclusive as is necessary in trials for offences, the Magistrate should not proceed purely upon an apprehension of a breach of the peace, but is bound to see that substantial grounds for such an apprehension are established by proof of facts against each person implicated which would lead to the conclusion that an order for furnishing security is necessary. What the nature of the facts should be depends upon the circumstances of each case, but where the nature of the Magistrate's information requires it, overt acts must be proved before an order under s. 118 can be made, and such an order cannot be passed against any person simply on the ground that another is likely to commit a breach of the peace. *Queen v. ## 16. FORFEITURE OF RECOGNIZANCES— contd.

4. ————— Necessity for evidence of forfeiture—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 502. An order estreating a recognizance or a bail bond must be made upon evidence duly recorded in the case, and not upon evidence taken in other cases. Where a Magistrate makes an order forfeiting a recognizance under s. 502 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the terms of the section must be strictly followed. It is not competent to direct that in default of payment the person whose recognizance is forfeited should be imprisoned, without first issuing a warrant for the attachment and sale of his immoveable property. In the matter of MOHESH CHUNDER ROY . . . . . 10 C. L. R. 571

5. ————— Evidence of person bound over—Power of Magistrate to reduce penalty. Per AINSLIE, J.—In a case in which proceedings are taken for forfeiture of recognizances, the person against whom they are held is competent to give evidence on oath on his own behalf. Quære: When recognizances are forfeited, is a Magistrate bound to forfeit the whole amount of the bond, and is the power of reducing the sum to a penalty corresponding to the breach of the peace confined only to the Government? In the matter of the petition of JEHAN BUKSH . . . . . 15 W. R. Cr. 87

6. ————— Opportunity to accede for cross-examination of witness—Proceedings on forfeiture of recognizance—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 502. A Magistrate is not justified in forfeiting a recognizance under s. 502 of Act X of 1872, unless the party charged with a breach of the peace has had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses upon whose evidence the rule to show cause why the recognizance should not be forfeited has been issued. EMPERESS v. NOBIN CHUNDER DUTT . . . . . I. L. R. 4 Calc. 865 ; 4 C. L. R. 243

7. ————— Liability to forfeiture—Evidence necessary—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 514. The mere fact of the person for whom another stands surety being convicted of a breach of the peace ought not to be sufficient to make the surety bond executed by the latter liable to forfeiture without any evidence taken in the presence of the surety to show that the forfeiture has been incurred. The language of s. 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) does not indicate that the final order making a person bound by a bond can be made without taking any evidence in his presence or giving him any opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established. The mere production of the original record or of a certified copy of the original record of the trial in which the principal had been convicted of breaking the peace within the period covered by a bond would not be conclusive, if indeed it would be any evidence, against the surety in a proceeding under s. 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HAR CHANDRA CHOWDHRY I. L. R. 25 Calc. 440

8. ————— Delay in taking steps to forfeit recognizance—Invalid proceedings. When a Magistrate has before him the fact that a person convicted by him of an offence attended with violence was under recognizance to keep the peace, and does not nevertheless proceed to forfeit such recognizance, it must be held that he thought it unnecessary to do so. Proceedings taken after the lapse of a considerable period are bad and contrary to the intention of the law. In re RAM CHUNDER LALLA . . . . . 1 C. L. R. 134

9. ————— Liability to forfeiture—Commission of offence—Theft. Where a person had been bound down by recognizance not to commit a breach of the peace, the amount of the recognizance cannot be recovered from him if he is guilty of an offence, such as theft, which does not amount to a breach of the peace, or which is not likely to occasion a breach of the peace. In the matter of the petition of HARAN CHUNDER ROY . . . . . 18 W. 10. ————— Subsequent offence. A person was bound down under recognizances to keep the peace towards all Her Majesty's subjects for a period of one year. Some time afterwards he wrongfully confined and extorted a sum of money from two raiyats who were supposed to have committed theft on his lands, he being for such offence fined and his recognizances forfeited. Held, that the matter ought to have ended with the fine; for the raiyats not having offered any resistance, no breach of the peace took place, and the amount of the recognizance could not be taken. In the matter of the petition of ZEABUDDIN HOWLADAR . . . . . 19 W. 11. ————— Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV of 1861), s. 293—Jurisdiction. A executed in district T a recognizance to keep the peace towards B. A was afterwards convicted in district S of having assaulted B in that district. Held, that A had forfeited his recognizance, and the Magistrate in district T could proceed against him under s. 293 of the Criminal Procedure Code. *QUEEN v. On the 14th of January 1878 he was convicted of an offence, and sentenced therefore to fine and imprisonment, but no order was made for the recovery of the penalty, though the Magistrate knew that the recognizance had been forfeited. On the 2nd of April 1878 the Magistrate, at the instance of a third party, called upon A to show cause why the penalty of the recognizance should not be paid, and a warrant for its recovery was issued on the 6th of June 1878. Held, that the warrant must be quashed on the ground that the Magistrate having inflicted a sentence of fine and imprisonment with the knowledge that the recognizance was forfeited he was not competent to inflict a further penalty, on a reconsideration of the circumstances. In the matter of PARBUTTI CHURN BOSE

RECORD-OF-RIGHTS—contd.

Kanta Lahiri v. Gaber Ali Khan, I. L. R. 30 Calc. 339, relied upon. Per PARGITER, J.—The difference between s. 103 of the old Act and the present section is, that under the former, the Revenue Officer was to record the particulars specified in s. 102; but under the present Act s. 103 gives an applicant the right to select what particulars he may wish to have recorded. If the applicant asks that all or almost all particulars mentioned in s. 102 be recorded that would constitute a "Record-of-rights;" but if only the particulars mentioned in cls. (a) and (c) of s. 102 be recorded, they not involving any rights, the record could hardly be called a "Record-of-rights." SUDHENDU NARAIN ACHARJYA CHOWDHRY v. GOBINDA NATH SIRCAR (1905) . I. L. II, Art. 14—Decree not produced—Recital in later decree produced, if evidence.* A suit by a party whose objection under s. 103A, Bengal Tenancy Act, to an entry in the draft record-of-rights has been rejected by the Revenue Officer, for a declaration of his rights is not governed by Art. 14, Sch. II of the Limitation Act. The order rejecting the objection under s. 103A, Bengal Tenancy Act, having no finality is not an order of a Government officer within the meaning of Art. 14, Sch. II of the Limitation Act. Further, the final publication of the record-of-rights merely raises a presumption of the correctness of the entry, and it is not necessary to bring a suit to avoid a presumption. Nature of remedy under s. 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act discussed. Agin Bindh v. Mohan Bickramshah, I. L. R. 30 Calc. 20, followed. Ashutose Nath v. Abdool, I. L. gives to tenants ample opportunity for correction of mistakes in the record-of-rights; but the tenants to avail themselves of the opportunity must make an objection to the draft-record, or institute a suit under s. 106 of the Act after the final publication of the record. 2. ————— Trespass to personalty in foreign State—Judicial cognizance—Question of title. Trespass to personalty in a foreign State (the title to such personalty depending upon the right to land in such foreign State) is cognizable by the Recorder's Court, so as to rebut a prima facie title to such personalty acquired within the Court's jurisdiction. The Recorder's Court cannot take judicial cognizance of the fact that the country in which the rights of the party attempting to rebut such prima facie title accrued is lawless and unsettled, and possesses no tribunal capable of pronouncing a decision on the rights of the parties which the Recorder's Court could consider as the decision of a Court of competent jurisdiction. Although the foreign State might be civilised, and have Courts competent to try the title, the Recorder's Court would have a right in a suit against a party subject to his jurisdiction to try incidentally the question of title to the land for the purpose of determining the right to the personalty. *SAYA LOO v. 1. — Cause of action—Defendant out of the jurisdiction. The Court of the Recorder of Rangoon had no jurisdiction in a suit brought against a defendant dwelling in Surat, though the cause of action arose in Rangoon. ANONYMOUS CASE . . . 18 W. R. 397

2. — Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 16 (c), proviso—Suit for damages for trespass on land and for injunction. The plaintiff sued in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to recover damages for trespass on land in his own possession situate outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court, asking at the same time for an injunction restraining the defendant from further acts of trespass. Both plaintiff and defendant resided within the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court. Held, (i) that the plaintiff, having alleged that the land was in his possession, was not entitled to the benefit of the proviso to s. 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (ii) that a suit for damage to land cannot be said to be a suit for which relief can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant, even though it may be joined with a claim for an injunction; and that for the above reasons the Recorder had no jurisdiction to try the suit. 3. — Reference to High Court, Calcutta—Lower Burma Courts Act (XI of 1889), s. 42—Conflicting decisions—Decision of Superior Court—Power of Recorder to refer. The Recorder of Rangoon, in a suit tried by him, referred to certain decision of the High Courts at Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras, which were in conflict, and, not agreeing with the decision of the Calcutta High Court, referred the case to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction. Held, that, as the decisions of the High Court at Calcutta are binding on the Recorder, he had no jurisdiction to make the reference, and that it must be returned. Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 31—Sale—Suit for specific performance—Mutual mistake—Clear proof. To establish a right to rectification of a document it is necessary to show that there has been either fraud or mutual mistake. "A person who seeks to rectify a deed upon the ground of mistake must be required to establish, in the clearest and most satisfactory manner, that the alleged intention to which he desires it to be made conformable continued concurrently in the minds of all parties down to the time of its execution, and also must be able to show exactly and precisely the form to which the deed ought to be brought." *Fowler v. The date of the institution of the suit was the 30th September 1880. A Division Bench of the High Court held on the appeal on the case coming up before them on the 18th October 1877 that the suit was not based upon any express contract made between the parties; that the transaction which took place on that date did not constitute an implied contract; and that therefore these contentions were not open to the plaintiffs, but the Court referred the question whether the plaintiffs' claim, so far as it was based on the statement of account on the 18th October 1877, fell within Art. 64 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Held, by MITTER, PRINSEP, and McDONELL, JJ.—That the question referred was a matter of limitation arising in the case which had not been decided in the order of reference, and without such a decision the case could not be disposed of; and as to that point, that the statement of account, not being signed by the defendant, did not fall within the terms of Art. 64 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Held by GARTH, C.J., and TOTTENHAM, J.—That the Division Bench, having held that the transaction afforded no basis for a suit, had disposed of the case, and the question referred was therefore immaterial. *DUKHI SAHU v. 5. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 617—Final decree or order. A Munsif, being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to entertain a particular suit, made an order returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. An appeal was preferred, under s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code, to the District Judge, who, entertaining doubts upon the question of jurisdiction, referred the matter to the High Court under s. 617. Held, that, inasmuch as the order of the Munsif was not a final decree in the suit, and any order of the Judge in appeal disposing of the plea of jurisdiction would not amount to a "final" decree within the meaning of s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court had not jurisdiction to entertain the reference. RAMPHUL v. The subordinate Judge, feeling doubt as to whether the actual value of the property or the value stated in the plaint should be regarded in fixing the security, referred the case to the High Court under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held, even assuming that section to apply to a proceeding of this kind under s. 647, that no reference would lie under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code. The question as to the amount of the security was a question relating to execution as contemplated by s. 244 of the Code, and therefore an order determining that question would be appealable under s. 2 of the Code. ISHWARGAR v. REFERENCE TO HIGH COURT—CIVIL CASES—contd.

S. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) does not authorize a reference, except on a point arising in a litigation between parties in a suit, or appeal, or in a matter wherein the Court is called on to adjudicate, that is, to pronounce on the opposite pretensions of contending parties. A pleader was fined Rs 25 by a second class Subordinate Judge for refusing to act on behalf of his client after receipt of retaining fee. On appeal, the District Judge referred the matter to the High Court under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XI of 1882). Held, that the inquiry into the pleader's professional conduct was of a disciplinary, and not litigious, character. The fact that an appeal lay from the Subordinate Judge to the District Judge did not make it litigious. In such an enquiry no reference could properly be made under s. 617 of Act XIV of 1882. YESHWANT NARAYAN ADARKAR v. DESOUZA . . . I. L. R. 12 Bom. 78

11. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 646B—Reference by District Judge of proceedings in Small Cause Court attacked for want of jurisdiction. Before a District Court can make a reference under s. 646B of the Civil Procedure Code, it must be of opinion that the subordinate Court has erroneously held upon the point of jurisdiction in regard to the particular suit before it, and that therefore the matter is one in which the interference of the High Court should be sought. The word "shall" in s. 646B, cl. (1), is not mandatory, but directory. MADAN GOPAL v. BHAGWAN DAS . . . I. L. R. 11 All. 304

The Subordinate Judge returned the plaint, being of opinion that the suit was not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The plaint was then presented in the Court of the District Munsif as an ordinary suit, but the District Munsif returned it on the ground that the suit was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The plaintiff then applied to the District Judge to submit the record for the orders of the High Court. Held, that the District Judge was bound to submit the record to the High Court under s. 646B of the Code of Civil Procedure on the requisition of the plaintiff, although the plaintiff might have appealed to the District Court against the order of the District Munsif. SIMSON v. 15. ————— Refusal to interfere—Practice—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 539, 617, 647. M, claiming to be a trustee or manager of a mosque, applied to the District Judge for permission to grant a lease of lands belonging to the mosque. In response to a proclamation issued, A, the opponent, appeared before the District Judge, claiming to be the owner of the village in which the lands were situate, and contended that the lands did not belong to the mosque and that the applicant was not the manager. The District Judge felt a doubt as to whether he had jurisdiction to entertain the application unless a suit was properly framed and filed under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and referred the point to the High Court under s. 617 of the Code. The High Court referred to answer the reference, being of opinion that no reference under s. 617 could be made on such an application. Ss. 617 and 647 of the Civil Procedure Code apply when doubts arise in the proceeding of a suit or appeal or execution or other proceeding. S. 617 was not intended to provide for suppositious cases which do not naturally arise in a proper proceeding before the Court. MAHAMAD HAJI ZAKERIA v. AHMADBAI HABIB-BHAI (1900) . I. L. The power conferred by s. 438 read with s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code upon a District Magistrate to make a reference to the High Court refers clearly to a "proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court." By the words "or otherwise" in s. 438 the Legislature never intended to give to a Magistrate the power to question the propriety of a judgment or sentence by a superior criminal authority; nor by the use of the words "or which has been reported for orders" in s. 439 could it have been intended that such report might be made by an inferior criminal authority with respect to a proceeding by a superior authority. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of "not guilty" on all the charges. The Sessions Judge agreed with the jury in their verdict on the 1st, 2nd, and 4th charges, but he differed from them on the 3rd charge, which was criminal misappropriation. This offence was not triable by a jury, and ought therefore, under cl. 3 of s. 269 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), to have been tried by the Sessions Judge with the aid of the jurors as assessors. Nevertheless, the Judge took the verdict

Banu Singh, 5 C. L. J. 224*, followed. The High Court cannot throw out a reference under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code merely because it might be argued, upon the face of the charge to the Jury, that the verdict was not altogether an unreasonable one, but it must consider the entire evidence and arrive at its own judgment after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and Jury. *Emperor v. The opinion of the Jury is their conclusion and not the reasons therefor, and in the case of divided verdicts the opinion of the minority must also be considered by the Court. The Legislature in directing the High Court to duly weigh the opinion of the jury gives an implied authority for the taking of their reasons for the verdict, and the Judge will do well before making the reference to invite such reasons, not for the purpose of deciding whether it should be made, but for consideration by the High Court after having made up his mind to refer the case and after telling the Jury of his intention to do so.

Held, further, that, s. 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872) having been repealed by s. 2 of Act V of 1876, the corresponding s. 399 of present Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) must also be held by virtue of s. 3 of the Code to have been repealed in the provinces, including Bengal, to which Act V of 1876 was extended. under the provisions of s. 9 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, found the accused to be thirteen years of age, sentenced him to six months' rigorous imprisonment, and directed that, in lieu of undergoing that sentence, he should be detained in a reformatory school for a period of five years, unless he should attain the age of eighteen years at an earlier date. Held, that the order was wrong, inasmuch as it failed to fix the exact period of detention. Semble: That in some cases it may not be necessary to ascertain the exact age of the offender. If he be not over fifteen, a period of three years may rightly be fixed; if not over eleven, a period of seven years may be fixed without further inquiry. But, in cases in which inquiry is necessary in order to fix the period, as when the offender is over eleven, and the Magistrate wishes to make the period as long as possible, he must find, as well as he can, the exact age of the offender, and is not at liberty to leave the decision of the question to the reformatory officials. The effect of the notification published by Government, regulating the periods for which youthful offenders may be sent to reformatory schools in the Madras Presidency, is to fix a minimum period of five years for all cases in which such a period is legally possible; namely, in all cases where the offender is not over thirteen at the date of conviction. It was not intended to prevent the Magistrate from fixing a period short of five years, but not short of three years, in the case of a boy over thirteen. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMA (1900)

Courtney, I. L. R. 28 Calc. 423*, referred to. The law requires that a Magistrate trying a case, or one to whom the proceedings of the case are submitted under s. 9 of the Reformatory Schools Act, should, in the first instance, sentence the accused to a term of imprisonment or transportation, which may then commute into one of detention in a reformatory school for such period as the law prescribes. An order for the detention of a youthful offender in a reformatory school, when no sentence of imprisonment or of transportation has been passed, is bad in law. RADHA KRISTO BARAT v. A boy of about 9 years of age was found in the grounds of the residence of the Commissioner of Patna at 3 A.M. in the morning with a brass lota in his hand. He was tried summarily and, without any preliminary inquiry as to the age of the boy being made, was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment, or in lieu thereof to be detained in a reformatory school for seven years. Held, that the accused did not come within the definition of "youthful offenders" as given in the rule framed by the Local Government under s. 8 of the Reformatory Schools Act, and the offence of the accused being his first offence, the case should have been dealt with under s. 31 of the Act. It is not that a Magistrate is under no circumstances competent to find from the appearance of a person convicted by him that he is a youthful offender, but it is generally desirable that there should be some reliable evidence on the point, and especially when it is necessary to determine the period of detention. The age of the accused being under twelve years, the Magistrate should, considering the provisions of s. 83 of the Penal Code, have found that the accused had attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his act. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. S. 16 of Act VIII of 1897 only precludes the interference of a superior Court with the original Court's order so far as it (1) determines the age of a youthful offender or (2) directs the substitution of detention in a reformatory school for transportation or imprisonment, where such substitution is not made without jurisdiction or is not otherwise illegal, having regard to the provisions of the Act. *Queen-Empress v. band by direction of the Military Secretary to Government, and requesting the Bank to conform to her instructions concerning the amount of deposit receipts then in charge of the Bank in the name of the deceased officer. The widow had taken out no letters of administration to the estate of her husband, nor had she a preferential claim or any preferential charge against it; but she paid all the preferential charges. On receipt of the letter from the president of the committee of adjustment, the Bank paid over all the moneys of the deceased officer in their hands to his widow. In a suit brought against the Bank by the first plaintiff (the grand-daughter of the deceased officer), who had taken out letters of administration to his estate on 6th June 1873, and her husband, the second plaintiff, to recover two-thirds of the moneys so paid by the Bank to the widow, with interest:—Held, that, on the payment by the widow of the preferential charges, the whole of the property remaining in the hands of the committee was "surplus" within the meaning of s. 5 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863, and that, assuming the Agra Bank at Bombay to be "within the command" within the meaning of s. 7, the moneys of the deceased officer in the hands of the Bank, as being part of such "surplus," should have been dealt with by the committee in accordance with the provisions of s. 10 of the Regimental Debts Act, 1863, and cl. 17 of the Royal Warrant, and should have been remitted to the Military Secretary to Government. Held, also, that the Military Secretary to Government had no authority to pay or order the payment of such "surplus" to any person except in accordance with the provisions of s. 12 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863. Held, also, that s. 8 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863 did not render it incumbent on the widow, for the purpose of ousting the jurisdiction of the committee of adjustment, to pay the preferential charges before the committee had taken any steps under s. 7. The true construction of s. 8 is that, on payment of the preferential charges, the committee of adjustment must be regarded as functi officio, except for the purpose of reporting, and should make over whatever property they have, which comes under the denomination of "surplus," in accordance with the terms of s. 10. Held, also, that the letter of the president of the committee of adjustment was a sufficient notice to the Bank that the committee were functi officio, and that the period had arrived when the civil law stepped in to regulate the case. Quære: Whether the Bank could be held to be a "person" within the meaning of s. 22 of the Regimental Debts Act of 1863; but even if it could:—Held, that the Bank were not protected by that section, the payment by them not having been made to a "representative" as defined in the Act. Held, also, that the Bank were not protected by s. 35 of the Regimental Debts Act, the payment not having been made "in pursuance" of the Act and the carelessness of the Bank in paying the money having been such as to amount to positive negligence, and debar them from pleading that they acted under

The Registrar of the High Court has authority, when so directed by an order of Court, to execute a conveyance on behalf of a party refusing to do so, so as to pass his estate, if any, but has no authority to bind him by entering into any covenants on his behalf. The power of the Registrar to execute such a conveyance rests upon statutory authority. General covenants for title and quiet enjoyment extend to the case of a defect known to the purchaser at the time of the sale, unless the intention of the parties that they should not do so is clearly expressed in the covenants themselves. "Conveyance," as used in rule 436 (Belchambers' Rules and Orders) means such an instrument as may be necessary to transfer the estate, if he has any, belonging to the person on behalf of whom the Registrar executes the transfer to the purchaser. Circumstances under which a pardanashin lady will be relieved from liability under covenants contained in a conveyance executed by her. D, an heir of one X, a deceased Hindu lady, sold and conveyed to M, in March 1878, a moiety in certain premises belonging to the estate of X. Subsequently a decree was made for partition of the estate left by X in a suit to which D, A, R, G, and S were parties, and an order was made in that suit directing the premises, of which D had so sold a moiety, to be sold by the Registrar and the parties were directed to join in the conveyance, the Registrar being directed to approve and execute the same on behalf of G, who was an infant. At the sale, the plaintiff purchased the premises, and thereafter D refused to execute the conveyance which included the usual covenants for title and quiet enjoyment. A summons was thereupon taken out against him and an order was made directing the Registrar to execute the conveyance on his behalf. The conveyance was then executed in September 1885 by A, S, and R, and by the Registrar on behalf of D and the minor G. In a suit instituted by M under the conveyance of 1878, the Court held that he was entitled to possession, as against the plaintiffs of the moiety of the premises covered by his conveyance. The plaintiff therefore brought a suit against D, A, R, G, and S to recover damages for breach of the covenants for title and quiet enjoyment. It was not found that R had any good independent advice in the matter, or that she clearly understood the nature of the contract she was entering into, and the liabilities she was taking upon herself. Held, that, although the Registrar had authority to execute the conveyance on behalf of D and G, he had no authority to enter into the covenants on their behalf, and that the suit should be dismissed as against them. Held, also, that, having regard to the position of R, the suit should also be dismissed as against her. RAM CHUNDER DUTT v. DWARKA NATH BYSACK

3. ————— Sale by Registrar—Title to property purchased at Registrar's sale—Doubtful title, enforcement of—Endowment—Rent charge. The Court will not enforce a doubtful title on a purchaser where (a) there is a reasonable probability of litigation resulting; or (b) where the title depends on the construction and legal operation of some ill-expressed and inartificial instrument, and the Court holds the conclusion it arrives at to be open to reasonable doubt in some other Court. Case in which the title sought to be enforced did not fall within these rules. KALLY DOSS SEAL v. NOBIN CHUNDER DOSS

4. ————— Compensation to purchaser for deficiency in area of land—Conditions of sale. At a Registrar's sale held on 13th June 1895 a property described as "Lot No. 11, formerly Lot No. 21, Emambaree Lane, containing by estimation 8 cottahs, be the same a little more or less," was sold to the applicant. One of the conditions of sale was that the purchaser would not be entitled to any compensation. On the 10th July the purchaser applied for and obtained an order to pay the balance of the purchase-money into Court, and for confirmation of the sale. Subsequently the purchaser caused the property to be measured, and discovered that it consisted only of 5 cottahs 13 chittaks and 38 sq. ft., and he accordingly applied for compensation in respect of the deficiency. The purchase-money was still in the hands of the Court at the time of the application. Held, that the proviso in the conditions of sale applied only to small or unimportant errors and misstatements, and not to a deficiency in measurement of a substantial character; and that in respect of the latter the purchaser was entitled to compensation out of the purchase-money in Court, although he had obtained an order for confirmation of the sale. Whitmore v. 5. ————— Sale notification—Boundaries, Rectification of—Compensation—Annulment of sale. In an application by a purchaser for rectification of boundaries or annulment of sale, where such rectification would involve the inclusion within his boundaries of a cookroom, which according to the sale notification was included within the boundaries of another lot purchased by another person, but which, according to the evidence, was always included in the lot purchased by the applicant and which the applicant was led to believe was included in his lot:—Held, that in determining what the property is which is purchased at Registrar's sale one has to look at the sale notification the description of the property and the boundaries therein given. It is therefore impossible to determine in the present application what were the boundaries of the property purchased by the applicant. That in a proceeding of this kind an application for rectification of boundaries cannot be entertained, and the best course is to annul the sale. ADMINISTRATOR GENERAL OF BENGAL v. ANNODA PROSAD DASS

6. ————— Dwelling-house—Conditions of sale—Title, abstract of, misstatement in—Acceptance of title by purchaser—Payment into Court of balance—Subsequent discovery of misstatement—Sale, rescission of—Compensation. A purchaser of a dwelling-house at a Registrar's sale accepted the conditions of sale, whereby he was required to furnish requisitions and objections, if any, within a fortnight after delivery of the abstract (and in this respect time was of the essence of the contract), and he was not entitled to call for any other documents except those abstracted, or for the originals of documents of which the vendor had only copies, and was to accept the title as shown in the abstract of title. By the abstract it was represented to the purchaser that he was purchasing the entire sixteen annas of the house and premises. The purchaser accepted the title as shown in the abstract, and paid the balance of the purchase-money into Court, without reserving any right to object to the title. He now applied to be discharged from such purchase, and for leave to withdraw the purchase-money from Court, on the ground that he had subsequently discovered that only an eight-twelfth share of the house had been sold to him, and that he had been misled in the purchase by misrepresentation contained in the conditions of sale and the abstract of title. Held, that, although there was no fraud on the part of the vendor, he knew, or had the means of knowing, that the sixteen-annas share of the property could not be sold, and, if the purchaser's allegations were true, the Court would not enforce the contract. Lachlan v. Reynolds, Kay's Rep. 52; M'Culloch v. Gregory, 1 Kay & Johnson, 286; Thomas v. Powell, 2 Cox 394; Else v. Else, L. R. 13 Eq. 196; and In re Banister, Broad v. Munton, 12 Ch. Div. 131, referred to. Held, also, that, in the case of a purchase of a dwelling-house, it is impossible to compensate a person in respect of such a material misstatement, and the Court must either enforce the contract or rescind the sale. It is different in the case of land, occupied for agricultural or such like purposes, where there is a deficiency in area. Ordered: that it be referred to the Registrar to inquire and report whether a title can be made to the property by the vendor. Further hearing adjourned until the return of the report. UPENDRA NATH MITER v. OBHOY KALI DASSI (1901)

The words "provided its authenticity be established to the satisfaction of the Court" in the same section pointed not merely at the exclusion of a forged deed from the benefit of the Act, but also of a deed tainted by fraud, although in other respects genuine. *SREENATH BHATTACHARJEE v. He petitioned the Civil Court, under s. 55, to set aside these decrees, on the ground that the bonds were executed on consideration of something to be done by the obligee, who had wholly failed to perform his part. The Judge dismissed the petitions, because he thought the matter was a more proper one for investigation in a regular suit. His successor dismissed the suit when brought, because, in his opinion, it did not lie. Held on appeal (by the majority of the Court), that no suit lay. 8. ————— Unregistered agreement incorporated into a judicial proceeding. A prior suit between the same parties, now contesting the right to part of an ancestral estate, claimed another part of the same estate, without comprising the lands now in suit, which, at the time when the first suit was brought, were outstanding under a mortgage. A decree had been made by consent excluding the lands now sued for. The defendant's case was that the lands now claimed together with those decreed by consent, had been made the subject of a compromise of which the terms had been stated in two written agreements not registered. Also that, according to the compromise, each of the parties was to take a moiety of the whole estate. Each had obtained possession; but the decree was limited to the part of the estate for which the prior suit then disposed of, was brought; and only one of the agreements—that one which related to the lands then in suit—was presented to, and accepted by, the Court which made the consent decree. Held, that this agreement had a different effect from the other one, as it constituted a step in a judicial proceeding and did not require registration. The order was pronounced in terms of it. But as regarded the lands now in suit, excluded as they had been from the decree in the former suit, the
